Americans in Mexico.
The New Cement Plant.
Coal, Gold, Silver.
Any Heaven for Donkeys?

—By ARTHUR BRISBANE—

HERMOSILLO, State of Sonora, Mexico, Feb. 23.

IT MAY interest you to see United States citizens, working with Mexican associates and employers, installing American machinery on Mexican soil. Across the Sonora River, opposite this city, is a long, high mountain of solid limestone, and at its foot unlimited supplies of good clay.

American engineers have called the raw materials perfect for cement, and sufficient in quantity to supply a big plant for about 900 years.

In six or eight weeks, a modern American plant, only cement factory on the west coast of Mexico, will begin production.

THE MACDONALD Engineering Company, of Chicago, has the general contract for the works. The big firm, reaching out for business in the American way, is also installing in Russia cement plants as big as any on earth.

William Reynolds, who comes from Stockton, Cal., is in general charge of construction for MacDonald. He is a blue-eyed young person, representing his country well.

GEORGE BECK is installing a 1,000-horsepower Diesel plant for the Worthington Company, of Buffalo, N. Y. These latest Diesel machines run themselves with a man to look at them occasionally.

Mr. Kingsbury's Standard Oil of California will supply them with fuel oil and is installing storage tanks for the purpose at Guaymas, nearest west coast port.

You see the California Standard Oil Sign "Coronaroja," "Red Crown," all over this country. H. B. Titcomb, president of Southern Pacific of Mexico, has run his tracks to the new plant. He will carry the oil and haul the cement.

J. G. Dean, engineer and chemist from Long Beach, Cal., will run the plant, and is supervising construction for the Mexican citizens that own it, and will make excellent profits.

Cement brought in from the United States costs $1.60 a sack here, with freight and tariff. The cement can be made here for 35 cents a sack, about one-fifth of the present cost.

THE HIGH development of American industry and American engineering genius is shown in the fact that everything in this plant is United States made, nothing from Europe, although freights from there are cheaper.

The electrical equipment is all made by Westinghouse. The General Electric Company must have been asleep. It includes many electric motors; one that runs the dry mill, of 300 horsepower and very high torque, is not much bigger than a moderate sized wash tub. Its power is applied through a speed-reducing machine ingeniously contrived.

THE CEMENT-MAKING machinery proper, kilns, crushers, mills, etc., comes from the Traylor Company, of Allentown, Pa. Mexico, as you see, is helping to meet industrial payrolls in many parts of the United States, and American workmen might remember that, when they hear objection to Mexican workmen that do, in America, railroad and other work that United States citizens will not do.

NEAR THE MILLS that grind clinkers and finally reduce the total product to dry cement powder are steel barrels in rows. They hold 65 tons of cast iron "pebbles," that roll around inside the cylindrical mills and do the grinding. That was all done, formerly, by flint pebbles from Denmark, and therefore the cast iron balls are called "pebbles."

All these high-grade American workers are paid, as the United States machinery is bought, with gold dollars, and when they return they will help Americans to understand Mexico better, and Mexican possibilities. But they are in no hurry to return.

MR. DEAN, of Long Beach, Cal., is much interested in a tract of hard coal, the vein 40 feet deep, covering 25,000 acres. He thinks he will get an interest in that. Some American capitalist will change that coal into powder at the mine, change the powdered coal into electric power, extracting by-products, worth more than the coal, and ship the power by wire all over Mexico's west coast.

That may be the start of a great industrial development sure to come here where efficient labor and unlimited raw materials invite energy and industrial ambition.

MEXICO, IN the future, will compete industrially with every nation in the world, ship to Europe and Asia from her own ports, and be as independent of the United States industrially and financially as the United States is now of Mexico.

Mr Reynolds, before he returns to Stockton and the next MacDonald Company job, will look around for a gold or silver mine, gold preferred, at the present price of silver. There are many of both kinds still to be found and developed here. Ask the keen young American manager of "Eltiore" silver mine, near Nacozari. He came down last night to consult the Governor concerning labor matters.

IN VISITING the works now before the new vehicle bridge over the Sonora River is built, you ride across the river in a

CITY WINS RAIL RATE BATTLE

P. S. C. Upholds Pittsburgh Steel Companies, Orders Revision by Railroads

HARRISBURG, Feb. 23.—(AP.)—By a majority decision the Public Service Commission today upheld the complainants in an action brought by Pittsburgh steel companies against the "short-haul rates" put into effect by rail carriers on May 20, 1930.

Commissioners Brown and Young filed dissenting opinions.

The dissenting opinion said:

"In view of the fact that the rates hereunder attacked have not been shown to be unreasonable maximum rates, and that there is no evidence in this record disclosing prejudice or discrimination by the application of these rates in Pennsylvania at any points within the jurisdiction of this commission, the complaints should have been dismissed."

NEW RATES ORDERED

The commission's order directed the defendant railroads to file a new rate schedule within 20 days for transportation of iron and steel articles, in carloads, minimum carload weight to be 40,000 pounds, from complainants plants to destination in the Pittsburgh district, which shall not exceed a scale of rates per 100 pounds ranging from 3 cents for five miles or less to 16 cents for hauls between 95 and 100 miles. These routes, the order stated, are to be computed on the shortest routes over which carload traffic can be moved without transfer of lading.

The following railroads were made respondents in the case:

Baltimore and Ohio, Bessemer and Lake Erie, Pittsburgh, Chartiers and Youghiogheny, Buffalo, Rochester and Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, Pittsburgh and Lake Erie, Monongahela Connecting Railroad, Pittsburgh and West Virginia and the Montour Railroad Company.

Interveners in the case included the Bethlehem Steel Company, Central Iron and Steel Company, Lukens Steel Company, the Phoenix Iron Company, City of Pittsburgh, Central Railroad Company of New Jersey, Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company, Erie Railroad Company, Lehigh Valley Railroad Company,

UTILITIES QUIZ CALLS MACKEY

By E. W. PRENDERGAST,

HARRISBURG, Feb. 23.—Following decision by Gov. Pinchot to defer his appearance before the Senate committee investigating the Public Service Commission until next week, the committee today resumed its inquiry with testimony by several Philadelphia witnesses.

Among those subpenaed today were Mayor Harry A. Mackey, James S. Benn, public service commissioner; Coleman Joyce and Ellis Ames Ballard, counsel for the Philadelphia Rapid Transit; Edwin R. Cox, president of City Council, and Francis B. Bracken, counsel for the underliers.

It was understood the witnesses were to be questioned regarding a secret conference held in Philadelphia four years ago involving the tangled affairs of the Philadelphia transportation system.

Gen. W. W. Atterbury, president of the Pennsylvania Railroad, delayed his appearance before the committee until tomorrow.

Britons' Trip Hints French Naval Pact

PARIS, Feb. 23.—(INS.)—News that British Foreign Secretary Arthur Henderson, First Lord of the Admiralty A. V. Alexander and R. L. Craigie were en route to Paris to discuss naval problems led to rumors here today that an Anglo-French agreement already had been reached.

EXPECT SUCCOP TO TALK

While Mayor Charles H. Kline continued his silence on the reported dismissal of Director of Supplies Bertram L. Succop, growing out of charges that the director bought city supplies from companies making highest bids, Succop today or tomorrow was expected to issue a statement on what transpired at a conference with Kline Saturday.

It was rumored after the conference that Kline had demanded the director's resignation, but this was doubted by politicians, who pointed out that Kline never yet has dismissed any of his department heads while they were under fire for irregularities.

Kline, after the conference, declined to affirm or deny the rumors of a tilt.

Mayor Kline held a conference late today in his office with City Controller James P. Kerr and Paul Kydd, a member of the Pittsburgh Bureau of Governmental Research, ostensibly on the reported Succop ousting. None had anything to say.

DONNIE TAKEN TO WHEELING

By WALTON WOODS,
Staff Correspondent.

NEW CASTLE, Pa., Feb. 23.—Motherless Donnie Shrader, 5½ years old, started back home to Wheeling today with his grandfather, Joseph Crawford, and the latter's son, John.

Last night Donnie prayed as he prayed nightly since the death sentence was pronounced upon Irene Shrader:

"And please God, don't let them kill mother."

The aged father of Irene Shrader, mother of Donnie, returned early today from the death house at Rockview where he bade his daughter a last farewell yesterday. He was calmer than he had been during the long ordeal of waiting.

Crawford brought along a gift from Irene to Elizabeth Davis, who lives at the home of Mrs. J. C. Dix where members of the Crawford family stayed on the visits to New Castle. It was the blonde's puff and powder box. Her clothes she left to Clara Dix and to the Dix family a one-eared gray cat that had been her constant companion while in the jail here.

By AL GOUGH.
Staff Correspondent.

ROCKVIEW PRISON, BELLEFONTE, Pa., Feb. 23.—Irene Shrader and W. Glenn Dague reached the end of their trail of banditry and murder in the electric chair today.

The final act in the drama of the blonde gun-girl and the former Sunday school teacher, who abandoned his wife and children to follow her in a life of crime, found Irene still the calm, collected leader and Dague docilely pursuing her into eternity.

Irene was the first to go. Promptly at 7 a. m., she seated herself in the electric chair; at 7:01 a. m., she received the single shock of 2,000 volts and at 7:05 she was pronounced dead.

Dague thrust himself into the chair at 7:08; a minute later the same voltage was sent hurtling through his body and he was declared officially dead at 7:13.

Irene walked through the death room door unaccompanied by the Rev. H. O. Teagarden, spiritual adviser of both, who turned back when Irene, with a typical gesture of maternalism for Dague, declared:

"I'm all right. Go back to Glenn so he won't break down."

Then she went on to her death, with the spiritual ministrations of the Rev. C. H. Lauer, Dormont pastor and penitentiary chaplain, ringing in her ears, while Mr. Teagarden remained with Dague, whom he accompanied to the electric chair a few minutes after Irene's body had been carried out.

PAY SUPREME PENALTY

The two were paying the supreme penalty demanded by the state for the killing of Corp. Brady Paul, of the State Highway Patrol, shot down December 27, 1929, while attempting to halt the pair in flight on a road near New Castle after a chain store holdup in Butler.

Irene was the first woman to die in the electric chair in Pennsylvania, and the first of her sex to pay the extreme penalty in the state since 1889.

She walked to her doom without a last sight of Dague, Although in the slow tramp to eternity from her steel cage in death row she passed his cell, a screen placed in front of it prevented her from even a fleeting final glimpse of her partner in crime. The two saw each other last when they entered the death house here Saturday.

Both went to their deaths calmly.

Irene walked with head up and shoulders back. She neither smiled nor frowned. Her face was a study. It was intense.

One woman witnessed the execution. She was Irene's matron, an unidentified registered nurse brought from Pittsburgh for the occasion. She was a witness upon her own request. She broke into sobs and was led from the execution chamber crying into her handkerchief.

Another nurse had accompanied the iron-nerved bandit-mother to the door of the death chamber, but she turned back as Irene stepped boldly into the chair.

IRENE WALKS ALONE

Four physicians attested to the death of Irene and Dague. In addition to these, four regular prison guards stood inside the roped area around the chair, while others in the death chamber were the prison chaplain, Warden Stanley P. Ashe and three state troopers in uniform besides the 12 witnesses provided by law.

As Irene started on her death march—the "last mile"—Mr. Teagarden sang:

"Lord God, be with me this hour."

She entered the death chamber at precisely 7 o'clock. The white-garbed nurse held her gently by the arm, but she did not seem to require any assistance. She looked straight ahead, her blonde hair stringing down over her forehead.

Irene's short and rather plump figure seemed strangely shrunken and pathetic as she came, the sheet of dazzling light playing on her features. Her black satin slippers ornamented with a small bow, beat softly on the floor.

She looked straight ahead. Her bright blue eyes gleamed as she took a few steps to her right to the chair. Directly back of the chair stood Robert Elliott, the tall, gray-haired executioner. He was ready. So was Irene.

They [illegible] to lift her into the chair [illegible] did Ruth Snyder [illegible] three years ago. Irene [illegible] and with resignation walked to the chair with its mask of straps and buckles.

Mr. Lauer, the prison chaplain, a Lutheran minister, stood directly before the chair Irene sat in it. He was reading from the Bible.

"Lord have mercy. Christ have mercy. Have mercy upon me, O God, according to Thy mercy."

Irene's eyes brightened, perceptibly as attendants quickly adjusted the straps on her legs and body.

They [illegible] leather mask [illegible] blonde hair. A [illegible] the size of the palm of a man's hand, had been clipped to the back of her head, to expose the electrode to establish a [illegible].

CHIFFON STOCKINGS

Her [illegible] had been rolled down [illegible] purpose of enabling the [illegible] to make a contact [illegible] skin. She wore [illegible] stockings, a concession to [illegible] vanity. They forced [illegible] to wear cotton stockings [illegible] chair over her protest.

The executioner [illegible] back to a mechanical [illegible] in the wall, painted black in vivid contrast to the immaculate whiteness of the room.

The chaplain was now reciting the beatitudes.

"Blessed are the pure in heart . . .

"Blessed are the merciful . . .

A spluttering crackle swept the room.

In the chair, beneath a huge reflector that sent a strong white light down upon the victim, Irene's body lurched upward. She was in the embrace of death.

Four times her body heaved in spasms against the heavy leather thongs. Slowly the minutes dragged. It seemed interminably long. It was only four minutes. Prison Physician Barger pronounced her officially dead at 7:05.

When the death mask was lifted from Irene, her features showed perfect composure. The eyes were closed. There was no horror, no pain.

No time was lost. The thongs were loosened. Three stalwart prison guards lifted her body as a wheel [illegible] slided in from the autopsy room. They placed the [illegible] form gently on the truck and what once had been Irene Shrader disappeared into the autopsy chamber.

DAGUE ENTERS CHAMBER

In a moment the words of the Twenty-third Psalm broke the deadening stillness.

At 7:06 Dague strode in, his shiny shaven head glistening under the strong lights. Mr. Teagarden preceded him, backing into the death chamber, reading over and over:

"The Lord is my Shepherd—

LOOKS AT CHAIR

Slowly and methodically, the tall evangelist intoned the Scripture and Dague strode on, his head up and his face immobile. He looked first half-way around into the faces of the witnesses ranged along the icy stone bench.

Then his wandering gaze focused on the grim machine of death. He took two long steps, wheeled halfway around, suddenly and sat down as though he were slipping into an old morris chair at home.

FACE HIDDEN FROM VIEW

One contact of 2,000 volts was sent surging in at 13 amperes. He was pronounced dead at 7:13.

Dr. Priestess, penitentiary physician at Pittsburgh, pronounced him dead.

At a signal from the warden the witnesses filed out. Dague was still strapped in the chair. Passing close to the instrument of death with its victim still taut in its maw, one could see his face pressed close against the front of the mask.

DRESSED FOR DEATH

Dague and Irene were awakened at 5:20 and were up and dressed for breakfast at 6 o'clock. They were attired in their death clothes, Irene in gray silk dress with white collar and cuffs, beige hose and black slippers and Dague in white shirt, gray prison trousers and slippers.

Their heads were shaved after dinner last night. Dague's sandy locks were shorn and clipped close to his head all over in prison style. Irene's tresses were shorn in front and a space about as large as her hand shaved on the back of her head to permit contact with the electrode.

Before she was led from her cell, Irene told a matron:

Dague declared:

"I am satisfied. I am ready."

MINISTER ENTERS PRISON

Mr. Teagarden, spiritual adviser to Irene and Dague, left his room in the Penn-Belle Hotel at 5:30 o'clock. He was met by a prison guard escort and taken in an automobile which swung off into the dark, shivery morning to pick up Elliott.

The minister and executioner rode the same automobile, whisking through the early morning to the prison farm and into the steel-fenced enclosure.

Gov. Gifford Pinchot, in a telephone conversation with Warden Ashe, flashed the "go ahead" signal for the electrocution last night.

A telephone connection between the deputy warden's office on the first floor of the death house and the Governor's offices in Harrisburg was maintained up to the minute the death penalty was accomplished, however, it was revealed by prison authorities.

A late bulletin issued from the prison last night announced that Irene and Dague had gone quietly to sleep about 10:30 o'clock. They dropped off to sleep like a couple of innocent babes, according to reports.

The blonde and her gunman sweetheart bore up remarkably after their arrival from Lawrence County jail Saturday. They ate and slept normally, making no unusual requests and for the most part were well-behaved and not a bit troublesome, according to prison officials.

This morning [illegible] called for and were served a breakfast consisting of grapefruit, toast, cornflakes and coffee.

PRAYS, READS COMICS

Irene and Dague spent most of their last day on earth yesterday praying and singing hymns with Mr. Teargarden.

For the most part Dague wrote and prayed.

Irene, in her idle moments, chatted gaily and inconsequentially with matrons and read the comic sections of the Sunday papers.

The blonde gunwoman received two visitors yesterday morning. They were her aged and saddened father, Joe Crawford, Benwood fish peddler, and her brother, John, a former salesman and distributor for automobile accessories in West Virginia.

The goodbys were more or less casual — nothing demonstrative and no tears. "Pap" took it hardest. He had braced himself for the ordeal with stimulants for his heart.

PRISON ESCAPE FAILS, 3 SLAIN

JOLIET, Ill., Feb. 23.—(AP.)—Two convicts were killed and a third fatally wounded as they were lowering themselves to freedom over the 20-foot wall of the Illinois State Penitentiary just before dawn yesterday.

Two were killed by the first blast of guns in the hands of guards warned in advance of the break. They were Joseph Norkiewicz, 31, and Julio Chileno, 39, both convicted on confidence game charges. Alvin J. Kilman, 34, serving for robbery, died several hours later in the prison hospital. All were from Cook County.

The big stone prison, housing 1,800 men, was quiet through the day. Col. Frank D. Whipp, state prison head, temporarily in charge, said there was no prison-wide unrest. The three men were members of a kitchen detail of five, and the plot was confined to that group, Col. Whipp said. The other two ran to safety.

FLORENCE, Ariz., Feb. 23.—(AP.)—Scaling a 20-foot wall while a guard's back was turned, 15 convicts, three of them life termers, fled the state prison here late yesterday into the surrounding desert. One, a Mexican serving a life term for murder, was captured nearby.

The guard was relieved of duty when the 7 p. m. checkup showed the 15 convicts missing.

Officials said the prisoners apparently escaped at intervals during a two-hour period. A steel girder intended for use in constructing a new building in the prison yard was leaned against the wall. The convicts climbed up the girder one at a time and dropped to the ground outside.

DEATH PENALTY VIEWS HERE UNCHANGED

Representative Pittsburgh Citizens Express Views On Execution of Irene

The execution of Irene Shrader and Glenn Dague did not change opinions on capital punishment held by Pittsburgh people. This fact was shown by a symposium of persons from many walks of life.

JUDGE SARAH SOFFEL: It has not affected my opinion on capital punishment, but I would rather not express myself.

DR. MAX SCHOEN, head of the department of psychology, Carnegie Institute of Technology: All and all, I'm against capital punishment, but in this particular incident, and under these conditions it was better all round. Irene and Dague lost everything; society lost everything. Still, when society has to resort to taking a life, there is something wrong.

JAMES M. CLARK, director of public safety: The laws of our state must be adhered to. A murder was committed. The Shrader woman and Dague were given a fair trial by an impartial judge and a fair jury. They gave their decision and the state took its penalty for murder.

PETER P. WALSH, police superintendent: Justice was carried out. A life was lost. Highway Patrolman Paul was performing his duty. He was a public servant and was willing to give his life for the protection of others.

JAMES FRANCIS BURKE: I am in favor of capital punishment, and these executions have not changed my opinion.

ALEX SAX, taxi driver, of 538 Herron avenue: I am not in favor of capital punishment; never have been. I believe life imprisonment would have been sufficient punishment for those two.

HILDA BAUER, soda fountain clerk, of 722 Boquet street: Nothing ever could change my opinion of capital punishment. I don't believe it is humane; there must be a better way of curing crime.

Doctor May Settle Suit Against Bull

CHICAGO, Feb. 23.—(AP.)—The $250,000 damage suit of Dr. John Streeter Sidley against W. Perkins Bull, K. C., who lies injured in a Toronto (Canada) hospital, may be settled out of court within the next week, Jay Frederick Reeve, Sidley's attorney, revealed today.

Dr. Sidley is suing Bull for damages suffered, it is alleged, because Bull has employed private detectives to shadow the physician for three years. Attorney Reeve said his client would receive a settlement of between $250,000 and $500,000.

Coolidge Suggests Job Aid in Reforestation

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Feb. 23.

To the Editor of the Sun-Telegraph:

If the government ever needs to give work to the unemployed an enlarged system of reforestation would be a partial solution free from objection. It would not interfere with rates of wages or marketing of production in any of the existing industries. Operation could cease without loss.

Calvin Coolidge

Everyone knows we are rapidly exhausting our timber supply. The authorities state that of our original 800,000,000 acres of virgin forest only about 140,000,000 acres remain. Annually forest fires sweep over 12,000,000 acres. We are cutting off 10,000,000 acres more which is about four times as much as is replaced by natural growth. We have planted less than 2,000,000 acres.

The nation and some of the states already have acquired much land for growing timber. Compared with what is needed only a slight beginning has been made in reforestation. Because it has no immediate effect and would serve no private interest, governments have been too slow to conserve, encourage and replenish our lumber supply. Yet we cannot maintain our present standards without a generous use of wood. Under the co-operation of federal and local governments a national policy of reforestation should be adopted without delay. CALVIN COOLIDGE.

Dague Revealed Inventor Of 'Fuelless Motor'

ROCKVIEW PRISON, BELLEFONTE, Pa., Feb. 23.—W. Glenn Dague, who died in the electric chair today with Irene Shrader, might have been a great inventor but for the chain of circumstances which followed a chance meeting of the former Sunday school teacher with the blonde gunwoman.

This was disclosed today by the Rev. H. O. Teagarden, pastor of the church Dague formerly attended, who was spiritual advisor to the condemned pair.

Mr. Teagarden told of an invention Dague had been working on prior to his taking up with Irene. It is a "fuelless motor"—a contraption designed to lift great weights into the air on the same principal of friction as that used by a "bumble bee," as the minister explained it.

Dague told the minister he had once completed a trial model which proved successful, but because of the lack of funds, he had been unable to develop it further. The doomed man turned over his plans and secrets to Mr. Teagarden.

A much-worn hymn book also was given to the minister who examined it, turning over the pages and murmuring:

"I taught Glenn to sing hymns out of this book down in West Virginia. He was a good boy when he came to my Sunday school class."

And then brightening a bit, he added as after-thought:

"We sang together, Dague and I, in his cell this afternoon. Do you want to know what we sang?

"We sang first 'At the Cross.' Then we tried 'Oh Happy Day,' and finally, 'What a Friend We Have in Jesus.'"

LIFE OF PAIR RIVALED FICTION

Thirty Holdups Made Trail of Three Deaths; Waitress, Companion Met by Chance

Outrivaling the most lurid fiction story, stage melodrama or movie thriller, the career of Irene Shrader and Walter Glenn Dague, which ended today with their electrocution at Rockview, claimed three lives, two by shooting and one indirectly. It began by a chance meeting of the two on a street corner in Wheeling, W. Va., three years ago. Irene was then 19, Dague 30.

Dague was a salesman for a Wheeling automobile firm. Irene a waitress. Dague, reared in the Sand Hill district, near Wheeling, had been a Sunday school superintendent, Boy Scout leader and had a citation for service during the World War. He was married and the father of two children.

Irene, fifteenth child of Joseph Crawford, a Benwood fish peddler, had drifted away from her husband, by whom she had one child, Donnie, later to play a conspicuous part in her subsequent life of crime.

Pair Infatuated

Dague's wife, Theresa, left him, taking their children. While she continued loyal, after his conviction and sentence to death, the tall, blue-eyed ex-soldier preferred Irene and evinced little interest in his wife's visits to the jail in New Castle, on several occasions refusing to see her and rejecting her gifts.

As the story of Dague's infatuation for Irene spread, he lost his job. It proved impossible for him to get another. He became morose. Irene once said that he had declared in a fit of despondency:

"The world owes me a living and by G—— I'm going to get it."

From that day, more than two years ago, Dague and Irene had entered the business of making a livelihood by robbery.

The pair participated in 29 robberies, other than that at Butler, Pa., which preceded the shooting of State Highway Patrolman Brady Paul. Dague so confessed, according to evidence at the murder trial.

Donnie 'Blind'

He and Irene, making their headquarters in Wheeling, raided stores in the Panhandle district of West Virginia and Western Pennsylvania. Donnie would be taken along as a blind. Sometimes

Avalanche Crushes Home, Six Killed

two-wheel cart, drawn by three donkeys harnessed abreast.

Coming the other way Saturday was a load of wood, drawn by five donkeys, barely able to keep their feet, with the water as high as their shoulders. Pulling was difficult. Donkeys fear to work in water, and the load of mesquite wood was heavy. The little creatures struggled desperately, and with the help of volunteers from shore, turning the wheels by hand, they finally came to shore.

Men work hard for a living in this country. As for the donkeys, if no heaven is prepared for them, that now bear the burden for millions of human beings, there is lack of justice.

WHILE BRIDGES are lacking, the Southern Pacific Railroad of Mexico, American built and owned, makes its railroad bridges useful to the public, free of charge. Over the Mayo River at Navajoa, the long railroad bridge, at close intervals, is provided with islands of safety built out over the edge of the bridge, railed in and perfectly safe when trains come.

The workers, including the Mayo Indians, are grateful for that, and also for the short cuts, as they gallop their horses along the railroad right-of-way.

FOR TRANSPORTATION in Mexico, obtaining passports, in which matter Mexico is most obliging and inexpensive, and for all useful information, apply to Mr. Mike Levy, Southern Pacific of Mexico district passenger agent, Nogales, Mexico. Young Americans that like to fly should visit this friendly country, and tell the people at home about it. There are many excellent fields close to the border, and fields perfectly equipped at Nogales, Ariz., Los Mochis, on the west coast and at Mexico City.

Attorney Certain He Could Prove Neither Fired Shot Which Killed Corp. Paul

Staff Correspondent.

ROCKVIEW PRISON, BELLEFONTE, Pa., Feb. 23.—Irene Shrader and Walter Glenn Dague asked their counsel not to take steps to obtain a further stay of sentence "because we do not want life imprisonment now," it was revealed in a letter written by Dague and made public today.

The Rev. C. F. Lauer, chaplain of the penitentiary, read the statement, which said:

"We are glad we are going to get away from this world of trouble.

RESPITE PROMISED

"Mr. Benjamin Jarrett, our attorney, came to us in the New Castle jail and told us that he could procure a 30-day respite, but we requested Mr. Jarrett not to interfere because we do not want life imprisonment.

"He said in this time he was sure he could get our guns for us and prove by them that neither of us had fired the bullet fatal to Paul. We knew that if this evidence was presented we would get a commutation of sentence. We had learned more of the love of Jesus from Mr. Teagarden and we both know the blood of our Saviour, Jesus, has cleaned us of all sin.

"We are ready to leave this place to go where Jesus has prepared a place for us.

"Death is but a change. We are leaving the troubles, sins and sorrows of this world.

TRIED TO BE HONEST

"I tried for many years to live an honest life. Then trouble started coming to me. Finally the devil had me where he wanted me. But now, glory be to God, I am again through the cleansing power of Jesus blood, one of God's own children.

"This also applies to Irene. She is saved and cleansed of all sin through the grace of our Lord and Savior. We both say God's own will be done.

"Our hearts are full of joy. May the reading of our experiences bring many souls to Jesus. May God bless all who read this.

TROOPERS KEEP CROWDS BACK

By DAVID H. ROSENTHAL,

ROCKVIEW PRISON, BELLEFONTE, Pa., Feb. 23.—All day yesterday and until the execution of Irene Shrader and W. Glenn Dague here today, roads leading to Pennsylvania's death house were blocked by state troopers and highway patrolmen.

At the request of prison officials, 25 state officers were ordered to report for duty. Thousands were attracted because of Pennsylvania's first electrocution of a woman, authorities said.

The roads were patrolled to avoid confusion either at Rockview or on the roads leading to the main highways. No person except officials of the penitentiary was allowed within miles of the place all day yesterday, and only those on official business and newspapermen were permitted on the property today.

Irene's Attorney Still Sure of Innocence

SHARON, Pa., Feb. 23.—Reiterating his conviction that Irene Shrader and Walter Glenn Dague were innocent, Benjamin Jarrett, Sharon attorney, one of the defenders of the pair, this morning said:

"It's all over now—only time will tell."

SAYS CRAWFORD KILLED PAUL

FLORENCE, Ariz., Feb. 23.—(AP.)—Joe F. Wells, alias Vernon Ackerman, of Guthrie, Okla., companion of Irene Shrader and W. Glenn Dague when they were captured in Arizona, and now serving a life term in the Arizona Penitentiary, said last night Tom Crawford, Irene's brother, before dying in his arms in January, 1930, said he (Crawford) had fired the shots which killed Corp. Brady Paul, of the Pennsylvania State Highway Patrol.

Wells joined Irene and Dague as they fled westward, and was involved in a running gun fight.

When the trio was captured near Phoenix, January 14, 1930, Wells at first was believed to be Tom Crawford.

Wells declared:

WIFE OF DAGUE COLLAPSES

WHEELING, W. Va., Feb. 23.—(AP.)—Mrs. Theresa Dague, wife of W. Glenn Dague, who died in the electric chair at Rockview Prison in Pennsylvania this morning, was reported in a virtual state of collapse at the home of Brice Dague, uncle of Glenn, at Sand Hill, near Benwood.

Relatives, talking for her, said she arranged to receive the body of her husband and have it interred at Dallas, W. Va., after private funeral services.

Mrs. Dague sent her children to Sunday school yesterday, but was unable to attend church herself.

The wife and her children said their last farewells to Dague in the jail at New Castle late last week, at which time the convicted slayer told his wife he was sorry for the trouble and worry he had caused her. It was the first time Mrs. Dague had visited her husband's cell in weeks, the man having previously intimated that he did not want to see his family.

Mrs. Dague formerly taught school at Viola, W. Va., but discontinued this work some months after her husband and Mrs. Shrader had been taken into custody following the killing of Corp. Brady Paul, of the highway patrol.

While engaged in teaching she was buying a small home at Viola. This she gave up after leaving her schoolroom duties. Since, she has been residing, with her children, at the home of Brice Dague.

Elliott Leaves Quickly After Executions

During his entire stay here previous to the double electrocution this morning all his movements have been cloaked with mystery.

On previous trips here, he had moved freely among hotel guests and in at least one cigar shop, willing to admit to anybody and everybody that he was the executioner of Ruth Snyder and Judd Gray, Paul Jaworski, Sacco and Vanzetti and scores of others.

ENFORCE LAWS, SAYS MARGIOTTI

PUNXSUTAWNEY, Pa., Feb. 23.—After the execution of Irene Shrader and W. Glenn Dague, Special Prosecutor Charles J. Margiotti made this statement by long distance telephone from Washington:

"I am convinced of the guilt of these defendants and that their punishment will bring about throughout the state a higher regard for human life, and especially for the lives of those who, like Brady Paul, are the constant guardians of social welfare. The increasing wave of crime in our country must cease and it is the duty of every law-abiding citizen to do all in his power to check its progress. There is no effective way of checking it except by the prompt and vigorous imposition of the penalties prescribed by law."

DESERT BATTLE CLIMAXED PAIR'S FLIGHT ACROSS U. S.

BLONDE CAUGHT BY ARIZONA POSSE

Pittsburgh was visited on this orgy of holdups [illegible] couple robbed the Kroger store at 835 East Ohio street, North Side, on November 26, 1926, binding the manager, Bernard A. Patterson, and escaping with $40.

Then came the holdup of the F. H. Butler store in Butler, Pa., that proved their undoing. The holdup occurred at noon, December 27, 1929. Irene Dague, Donnie and Tom Crawford had taken rooms at a hotel in Butler the night before. They had visited the scene of the contemplated holdup.

Holdup Successful

Irene later said:

"We saw that the store had a rear room—that was enough."

The holdup was perpetrated without a hitch. Wish Angert, the manager, was behind the counter when the bandit pair entered, leaving Donnie and Crawford in the car outside.

Dague held up Angert, compelled him to enter a rear room where he bound him. Irene took out his false teeth at his request. Fred Altenberg, 73, a customer, entered as the holdup was in progress. He, too, was roughly treated and left bound. The shock of the experience and treatment incapacitated him. He was unable to attend the trial of the pair and died September 14, 1930.

Taking about $45 from the cash register, Dague and the blonde ran out to their car and fled.

The alertness of Angert, bound in the rear room, caused him to note the sound of their horn. He told those who came to his rescue a few minutes later the make of the car in which he thought the bandits had left. Word was flashed to the state police and highway patrol.

Halted on Road

Their path of escape led along the Butler-New Castle highway. They were nearing New Castle when two state highway patrolmen motioned for them to halt. They did so.

Dague turned over his pocketbook containing a driver's license and got out of the car. Irene followed.

The blonde pulled her revolver on Corporal Paul, apparently before the latter suspected he was dealing with bandits. Irene coolly backed the patrolman up 12 or 15 feet and fired at his chest. He fell to the roadway. As he fell he shouted to his fellow officer, Private Ernest Moore:

Mr. Moore

"Draw your gun."

What happened next has not been definitely established. Testimony at the trial showed that Moore had gone to the front of the car and that there was an exchange of shots. Paul rose, staggered toward a pole and is believed to have sent a parting bullet at his assailants.

Leaping into the car Dague and Irene sped on to New Castle. Paul was hurried to a New Castle hospital where he died. His dying request to his comrades was:

"Get them, they got me."

'Mama Shot Cops'

From New Castle the blond and Dague began their flight, realizing the police would spread a nation-wide net for their capture. They sped to Bellaire, O., where they smuggled Donnie into the home of Irene's sister, then left under cover of night.

It was from the lips of Donnie, then 4 years old, that Pennsylvania State Police got the first convincing evidence of the identity of Paul's slayers.

Questioning the lad in a joking mood, they were startled when he said to them:

"Ho, ho! My mama shot two cops like you."

For several days the trail was cold. In several towns of the Tri-State district clues bobbed up only to lead nowhere. Once the hunt centered in Pittsburgh, but it proved fruitless.

The first inkling that the pair was headed west came from St. Louis, where Patrolman William Keissling exchanged shots with an autoist who refused to halt at his request. A woman was in the car.

Meet Ex-Convict

Somewhere on the way they picked up Joe Wells, a one-time convict, who was with them when they were captured.

At Florence, Ariz., they kidnaped Deputy Sheriff Joe Chapman and held him prisoner, commanding him to direct them out of the country. Chapman kept them driving in circles. Reaching Chandler, there was more gunplay. Chapman wounded, was dumped out of the car.

In the firing, Deputy Sheriff Lee Wright of Maricopa County, was mortally wounded. He died some day later.

From then the pursuit of the fleeing bandits grew hot. They abandoned their car and struck out across the desert.

They were trailed by Indians of the Pima Reservation and followed to a hill beyond the Gila River. They took refuge behind boulders, opening fire on the advancing deputies and Indians.

Irene Tried

The gunplay was brief. Several deputies circled the hill, came up from behind and got the drop on the blonde and her male companions. They surrendered and were taken to Phoenix on horseback. That was on January 14, 1930, 18 days after the murder of Paul.

Returned to New Castle through extradition proceedings, Irene was placed on trial, March 10. A jury of 10 men and two women heard the testimony. A verdict of guilty was returned with recommendation of death.

The defense fought hard to introduce evidence that Irene was under the spell of an irresistible impulse to rob, kill and flee, but this was ruled out by the presiding judge, R. L. Hildebrand.

The blonde was represented by Attorneys Thomas W. Dickey and Benjamin Jarrett. For the commonwealth District Attorney John S. Powers of Lawrence County, had as special prosecutor, Charles J. Margiotti of Punxsutawney.

Mr. Margiotti

Dague was placed on trial, March 24, before a jury of four women and eight men. Virtually the same testimony was presented as in Irene's trial. His aged father, Albert L. Dague, of Dallas, W. Va., took the stand long enough to identify himself. Dague, too, was convicted with a recommendation of the death penalty.

After a motion for a new trial was refused by Judge Hildebrand an appeal to the Pennsylvania Supreme Court was filed in Pittsburgh, August 26, citing 31 instances wherein the lower court was declared to have erred, one of them being refusal to admit evidence bearing on the alleged "irresistible impulse."

Rich Woman Aids

Mrs. Ella J. Mountz, wife of a coal operator of Smith's Mills, Clearfield County, went to the aid of Irene and Dague, by engaging Attorney Percy Allen Rose, of Johnstown, to aid in arguing their case before the Supreme Court.

Arguments were heard by the Supreme Court in Pittsburgh, October 8 and 9. On November 24, the court handed down an opinion, written by Justice William I. Schaffer, and concurred in by the entire bench, holding that the two defendants had been given a fair and impartial trial, and denying their appeal.

Former Gov. Jonh S. Fisher followed the high court's decision by signing the death warrants on December 10. The day following, he set their execution for January 12. Three days later he issued a respite until the week of February 23, to permit the application for commutation of death sentence to be heard at the February meeting of the State Pardon Board.

Last Hope Fades

Meeting February 18, the Pardon Board refused the request for commutation, after hearing arguments.

The next day Joseph Crawford, father of Irene, Donnie and other relatives of the blonde, made a personal appeal to Gov. Pinchot, but he informed them he was without power to intervene without written recommendation of the Pardon Board.

Attorney Rose made a last-minute appeal for a reprieve, February 20. The Governor declined to grant the reprieve; with the result that the doomed pair left the Lawrence County Jail for Rockview last Saturday.

Final appeal for the doomed pair was received by the Governor Saturday from Judah P. Benjamin, of New York City, who was chairman of the Ruth Snyder clemency committee.

Rewards totaling $3,200 have not been paid by the Lawrence County commissioners. They are understood ready, however, to pay $2,000 to five Arizona deputy sheriffs who captured Irene and Dague. The remainder they felt should be retained, for a time at least, in event Tom Crawford should be apprehended. He also stands charged with the murder of Paul.

As the electric chair brought the pair's lives to a close, it was the hand of Robert Elliott, official executioner for the states off New York and Pennsylvania, who pulled the switch.

UTILITIES QUIZ CALLS MACKEY

a counsel to represent Pinchot's office. The appointee is William A. Gray, noted Philadelphia lawyer, distinguished in criminal cases.

The forester explained that Gray would be paid from the executive fund.

Charles J. Hepburn, counsel for the probing committee, last night issued a statement concerning his recent pronouncement that he differed with Chairman Ainey, of the Public Service Commission, on whether the commission has or has not authority to regulate issues of public utility securities.

HEPBURN STATEMENT

Hepburn said in 1925 a deputy attorney general advised Gov. Pinchot the commission had no jurisdiction and that Ainey based his answer on this. The statement explained:

"Insofar as the opinion relates strictly to the power of the Public Service Commission to regulate of and by itself the issuance of such securities, I agree with that opinion. But I am decided of opinion that the Public Service Commission, acting with and through the attorney general, has ample power to supervise and control the issuance of such securities.

"Under our law, public service companies may issue such securities only for specified considerations, which must be adequate; utilities must file with the Public Service Commission certificates of notification, setting forth the class and amount of securities proposed to be issued and the consideration for them—the Public Service Commission has ample authority to check up these statements.

"In any case of inflation or improper issue, the facts can be certified to the attorney general for action by him, and he has ample power under the law to proceed against the offending corporation. If the commission neglects to act, the Department of Justice may itself examine the commission's records to acquire the information.

"In other words, after the information is acquired by the Public Service Commission, it is up to the Department of Justice. The necessary proceeding is somewhat cumbersome, I can see, but in my opinion it would be absolutely effective."

That confirmation of members of the Workmen's Compensation Board may be brought out on the floor of the Senate tonight or tomorrow depends on whether "prominent citizens who asked for a hearing press their request." So Senator Frank Baldwin, chairman of the Executive Nominations Committee said. Last Friday the administration ousted Board Members Paul Hook, John Morrison and Joseph Foltz. The new members, Edward Hunter, Judge Albert Dade and W. J. Buchanan, have not been confirmed by the Senate, and the board cannot function until they are.

Speaker C. Jay Woodruff announced that he would name the House probing committee after tonight's sessions. D. Glenn Moore will be chairman.

CITY WINS RATE BATTLE

COMMISSION SETS SCALE

The commission's order set the following scale of rates per 100 pounds for minimum carload weight of 40,000 as "just and reasonable rates" which "shall also be applied uniformly to short hauls throughout the state."

Under five miles, 3 cents; 5 to 10 miles, 3¾ cents; 10 to 15 miles, 4½ cents; 15 to 20 miles, 5¼ cents; 20 to 25 miles, 6 cents; 25 to 30 miles, 6½ cents; 30 to 35 miles, 7¼ cents; 35 to 40 miles, 8 cents; 40 to 45 miles, 8½ cents; 45 to 50 miles, 9¼ cents; 50 to 55 miles, 10 cents; 55 to 60 miles, 10½ cents; 60 to 65 miles, 11¼ cents; 65 to 70 miles, 12 cents; 70 to 75 miles, 12½ cents; 75 to 80 miles, 13¼ cents; 80 to 85 miles, 14 cents; 85 to 90 miles, 14½ cents; 90 to 95 miles, 15¼ cents; 95 to 100 miles, 16 cents.

It is further ordered that all distances are to be computed "on the basis of the shortest route over which carload traffic can be moved without transfer of lading."

The decision has been regarded as being of exceptional importance in view of the fact that the rates complained against were adopted by the respondent carriers in accordance with a survey and report made by the Interstate Commerce Commission. This survey was made by the Interstate Commerce Commission with a view of adjusting and unifying the short-haul rates throughout the country.

COMPANIES PROTEST

In attacking the new tariffs before the Public Service Commission, the counsel for the Western Pennsylvania steel manufacturers maintained principally:

(1)—That the rates applied by the respondent carriers were practically the Interstate Commerce Commission maximum rates, which the carriers were not bound to put into effect; and

(2)—That the Pennsylvania Public Service Commission has the authority to regulate all intra-state rates and that the I. C. C. rates are properly no more than suggested rates in movements within the state.

The intercenters opposed the restoration of the lower rates in the Pittsburgh area if no proportionate change in rates were to be made in other sections. The Bethlehem Steel Corporation mobilized its legal and rate experts in an intervention move to protect its large Cambria Plant at Johnstown, contending the latter part is properly in the Pittsburgh area and would suffer if the complainants were granted the relief they sought. It was the Bethlehem Corporation's contention that any restoration of the old rates in the Pittsburgh area should be followed by further revisions of the longer-haul rates in order to maintain a general equality of iron and steel rates for all producers in Pennsylvania.

EGG

—Produced for EATING!

Formerly, when an egg was FRESH, there was no more to be said about it. That established its status as a good and highly desirable food.

Today freshness alone is no longer the sine qua non. Scientific research has very definitely established that NOT EVERY fresh egg is a good egg, and that the conditions under which many eggs are laid actually make those eggs unfit for human food.

Reason It Out For Yourself

Consider first the ordinary barnyard hen, a regular tramp, compelled to dig, scratch and fight for a pitiful, bare existence; a hen that eats and drinks whatever, wherever and whenever she can—and only she knows what she eats and drinks.

Compare this poor hen—passing her life amid unsanitary barnyard conditions, running over the same contaminated soil year after year—compare her with the wonder flocks of snow-white hens, from high-bred, registered stock, the hens that lay DONAHOE'S FIFTH AVENUE EGGS.

DONAHOE'S Fifth Avenue Eggs Are Produced Under Ideal Conditions

The snow-white hens that produce DONAHOE'S Fifth Avenue Eggs know the pleasure of running over broad acres of clean yards—the soil is kept free from contamination by being regularly sprinkled with lime or gypsum, then turned over and a crop of feed grown thereon. Crops grow quickly, they are constantly rotated, and thus the soil is kept clean and sweet. Eggs produced in such surroundings naturally have a sweeter, finer flavor than any other eggs.

THE ONLY KIND OF AN EGG That Can Reach the Highest Grade Established By The United States Department of Agriculture

DONAHOE'S FIFTH AVENUE EGGS have light yellow yolks, recognized by the United States Department of Agriculture as an egg of superior quality; in fact, the only kind of an egg that can reach the highest grade established by the Department of Agriculture. And DONAHOE'S FIFTH AVENUE EGGS are INFERTILE—this again means a more delicate flavor, a more agreeable taste than is possible in the ordinary egg.

Let your own taste be the judge. Soft boil or poach one of DONAHOE'S FIFTH AVENUE EGGS alongside an ordinary egg and note the difference! You will be surprised and delighted with the wonderful, sweet, delicate flavor of DONAHOE'S FIFTH AVENUE EGGS.

CHAIR WITNESS UNFRIGHTENED

By LEE CURRAN,
Staff Correspondent.

ROCKVIEW PRISON, BELLEFONTE, Pa., Feb. 23. — Karl D. McKain, of Munhall, was the only Allegheny County witness to the execution, aside from newspapermen.

McKain said:

"It was the first execution I ever witnessed, but the surprising thing was that I did not feel any fright, as I had been led to believe.

"When we went in, state troopers searched us thoroughly. I even had to take a key case out of my pocket and show them what it was.

"After we were searched, we signed the register and then went to the second floor to the death chamber. We took our seats, and officials showed us how the machine was operated.

"Then Irene was brought in. She walked right to the chair. Elliott pulled the switch, and everything was all over.

"Dague was brought in immediately after. He was just as calm as Irene.

"We filed out of the chamber before he was removed and signed the death warrant in an adjoining room. Not a word was spoken."

PAUL'S MOTHER NOT VENGEFUL

HICKORY, Pa., Feb. 23.—Mrs. Vinta Paul McGugin, mother of Carp Brady Paul, slain state highway patrolman, for whose death Irene Shrader and Glenn Dague were executed in the electric chair at Rockview Penitentiary this morning, holds no revenge.

Informed of the electrocutions, Mrs. McGugin said:

"I hold no revenge in my heart for the murderers of my son, and never have held any. Irene Shrader and Glenn Dague can rest easy in their graves in the thought that I, as Brady's mother, hold no animosity for them. Naturally, I felt much anger for them when Brady was killed, but revenge never motivated my thoughts."

Paul is buried in a cemetery here, only a short distance from his former home. Mrs. McGugin said she planned to place flowers on his grave today.

Execution News Of Record Volume

BELLEFONTE, Pa., Feb. 23.—(AP.)—Two score news writers, using practically every device known to their craft, set a record for this section today in sending out the last thousands of words concerning Mrs. Irene Shrader and W. Glenn Dague, executed today.

Telegraph company officials said hundreds of thousands of words were transmitted over their wires. Hundreds of thousands more were sent by telephone. It was the heaviest volume either service ever had experienced here.

HOW IRENE, FIRST TO GO, TODAY WALKED PAST DAGUE'S CELL, NO. 1 IN DEATH ROW

Dague's Relatives Refuse To Permit Body Moved With That of Irene

By LEE CURRAN
Staff Correspondent

BELLEFONTE, Pa., Feb. 23.—Relatives of Walter Glenn Dague refused to permit his body to be sent home with that of Irene Shrader, E. E. Widowson, Bellefonte funeral director, disclosed today.

Widowson said he had been notified by representatives of the Dague family that Dague's body must be taken from the death house at Rockview on a different trip from that for the blonde's body.

They also insisted that the two bodies be shipped to Wheeling, W. Va., on different trains, Widowson asserted. Otherwise, he said, they would not agree to pay their share of the expense.

Widowson refused to reveal from whom the demand came. Word from Wheeling was to the effect that Mrs. Teresa Dague, widow of Glenn, and his brother, Cecil Dague, had assumed charge of the burial.

A cordon of state police were thrown around the funeral directors' parlors this afternoon when the crowd of curious sought to view the bodies. Acting under requests from relatives, neither body was on view. Dague's body was prepared for burial and shipped to Wheeling at 2 p. m. Irene's was not to go until tomorrow.

Funeral services will be held Wednesday. Dague's body was to be sent to Elm Grove, W. Va., to remain in an undertaking parlors until tomorrow, when private services will be held in the Methodist Episcopal Church at Sand Hill. The Rev. H. O. Teagarden will officiate. Dague's grave will be beside those of his mother and sister.

Irene's body was to be taken to Wheeling, W. Va., for services in an undertaking parlors at the same time as Dague's funeral. The Rev. M. A. Sprague, of the Wesley Methodist Episcopal Church, will officiate. Irene will be buried in Mt. Rose Cemetery, Bellaire, O.

Brother Unnerved Over Irene's Death

WHEELING, W. Va., Feb. 23.—John Crawford, brother of Irene Shrader, heard the first message of his sister's death in a local newspaper office. He arrived at the office 10 minutes before the hour set for her to go to the chair. When the brief message was shown to him he trembled.

He waited until a "flash" on Dague's execution was received, and then said he was going out to telephone to relatives.

ALMA RUBENS OVERPOWERED, TAKEN TO SANITARIUM

Forced to Abandon Best Film Role, She Fought Mate, Doctor

By ALMA RUBENS.

CHAPTER XXI.

It might be fitting here to mention the fact that at no time, throughout the five years I have been using dope, have I ever had any real difficulty in obtaining it—that is, as long as I had the money to pay for it.

Once a person gets the reputation of being a "dope fiend" it is that way. No matter what city or village you may go to, in whatever section of the land, your reputation either travels ahead of you, or else arrives almost simultaneously.

Miss Rubens

Up until this time the habit had never interfered with my work. Despite my suffering, physically because of the craving for dope, and mentally because of Ric's apparent indifference, I managed to successfully complete "Show Boat."

And, up until the time when the management suddenly decided to inject dialogue into production, I don't believe any of my business associates had the slightest suspicion that I was a confirmed "hophead."

The call for my reappearance on the lots to read in the dialogue came as a great surprise. I was failing fast. I knew that I would have to go to a sanitarium, but I was holding off until my husband asked me to go. I loved him madly now. It may look silly in print, in view of my confessions, but, regardless I loved him!

My mother knew this. And she got the idea that if she'd return to the ranch at Madera, Ric might deviate from his habit of ignoring me, out of sheer sympathy. She reasoned that he had loved me when he married me, and that this affection might be restored if I were left wholly dependent upon him.

The telephone call for me to return to the lots came on the same day my mother left. I promised to appear in two days, to comply with their request.

And, the same day, Ric, for the first time in weeks, recognizing me directly, came in and said:

"Alma, you've got to go to the hospital! You're going in the morning. You might as well make up your mind to it. Things have gone as far as they can."

'Ric' Unkind

Oh, if he had only been a little kind. I wanted to follow his wishes, but his manner irked me beyond measure.

I told him about the dialogue.

"I don't give a damn," was his reply. "You're going. Tomorrow."

I begged him. I pleaded with him. I promised to abide by his wishes if he'd only let me finish my picture.

"Just think of it, Ric," I pleaded. "They've spent a million dollars making 'Show Boat.' Think what will happen if they have to get a double for the dialogue. Everything may be ruined."

"Well," he shouted. "Ain't you dressed yet? You're going away. Hear me. I told you so last night and you ought to be ready. D'you want 'em to take you like this?" He pointed to my nightgown.

"No, no, no, no," I cried. "Please no, Ric. For God's sake just let me finish my picture and I'll do anything you want. Just let me finish that."

Dr. C., downstairs, hearing the commotion, came running upstairs. I must have been a sight. He helped me onto the bed.

I appealed to Ric to let me finish "Show Boat." He was obdurate. He said if I didn't go peaceably he'd drag me out in my nightgown.

Convinced that I was beaten, I beseeched him to let me "go like a lady." I promised to get dressed and accompany them. I wanted to be freed of the dope curse, but I didn't want to be taken as if I were a violent maniac. They agreed.

I went into my bedroom and sparred for time. Every few minutes Ric would come to the door and demand that I hurry. I was playing for time, for what reason, I don't know. Nothing could help me, I was sure of that.

Finally, when I knew I could hold them off no longer, I went to my writing desk and took out a long shiny paper cutter, with the idea in mind that, if I couldn't escape I'd kill myself before we got to a sanitarium.

I threw on a heavy fur coat and hid the dull, but pointed paper knife up my sleeve. Then I flounced out and walked past them both as they stood at the top of the stairs.

* * *

They followed me downstairs and I went down the front stoop.

Dr. C. was right behind, but Ric stopped in the doorway. Then I knew that he was not coming along, that he was not even going to kiss me goodby. He didn't care what happened to me.

Instantly I made up my mind that I would checkmate him. I was burning inside. Forgotten was my thought of committing suicide. I would beat Ric if it was the last thing I ever did.

In the meantime, a white-coated interne, or male nurse, seated in Dr. C.'s automobile, which had been parked some distance down the street, drove up and stopped in front of the door.

I turned and sped like a deer to the corner, almost bumping into a middle-aged, shriveled sort of man, walking across the intersection. I apologized quickly and fell into step with him. Dr. C. was right behind.

Cried for Help

"Help me," I whispered. "They're trying to kidnap me. Don't let them take me."

He appeared greatly surprised, as no doubt he had reason to be. Quite an unusual request, especially from a girl, in broad daylight. I suppose he was too dumfounded to reply. Anyhow, we kept walking, and, out of the corner of my eye, I could see Dr. C. signaling his companion to catch up with us with the car.

This kept up, I suppose, for a distance of about 150 feet. Then, I could hear Dr. C. panting close behind me and the chugging of the automobile, alongside.

Just as he was about to seize me I threw off my gorgeous fur coat, for which I had paid $4,000, and tried to run. But, I was too late; Dr. C. had my left wrist in his grasp.

He swung me around, and as he did so I slipped the knife down into my hand, pushed in close and struck him.

"Oh, oh," he screamed, loosing his hold on me. "She's stabbed me. She's stabbed me."

And, as usual, I had to laugh, frightened as I was, and in spite of my unhappy position.

Also, I ran. As fast as my legs would carry me. I ran until I reached a gasoline station, where the proprietor knew me.

I was completely out of breath.

"Why, Miss Rubens," he exclaimed. "What's the matter. What's all the trouble?"

I pointed at Dr. C. and his companion in the car, just driving up. I hurled the knife behind the hedges adjacent to the garage.

"Those men attacked me," I gasped.

Biff! Biff! Bang! Bang! One, two! One, two!

As quickly as that, both were cooling their heels in the dust.

The garage man, a big husky, had waited for no further explanation, and no sooner had they slid out of the car than he sent them whirling with well directed blows.

Just then a woman drove up in a dilapidated Ford. Even with all the excitement, I remember that it bore a Kansas license. She was a typical school marm, out on a tour.

I tried to climb in, begging her to hurry away. But I was out of luck. I suppose my dishevelled looks were against me. And, while I was arguing with her a crowd was gathering and apparently Dr. C. and his assistant had explained the situation to all.

They ran over and seized me. I wilted. I knew all was lost. I let them lift me into the car, into the seat between them, Dr. C.'s assistant being the driver.

Once just as we slowed up for traffic I saw the opportunity. Stealthily I turned the handle of the door, and out to the street fell the doctor. I let on that it was an accident; that I had nothing to do with it.

Then we came to ——— another private sanitarium, where I ran into one of the most horrifying experiences that a girl possibly could survive, and retain her sanity.

While sitting in an anteroom, awaiting my official admittance, I saw them carry a dead woman from the cell I was to occupy!

WALTER WINCHELL
On Broadway

(Copyright, 1931, by Daily Mirror, Inc.)

Things I Never Knew Till Now
(But which you knew all along!)

That there is an egg-shaped salt-shaker on the market which cannot be tipped over, designed especially for the superstitious.

That a musical comedy ran for nine months in New York without selling a ticket. You paid 50c for a $5 pass.

That you never see any women in the breadline.

That the coast-to-coast chain of restaurants features a dramatic criticism of "Private Lives" on its menus.

That the dumb can "talk" (with their fingers) more quickly; the average speed being 120 words per minute.

That the reason they bar skyscrapers in London is that their water mains are not sufficiently powerful to throw water more than 80 feet high. The insurance companies there also interfered.

That experts will tell you women's feet are two sizes larger than they were 20 years ago. The better to kick you with, my dear.

That if your thumb turns back you are obstinate.

That the nickel-in-a-slot cafeterias won't allow smoking, and do not sell ciggies, but they give you free matches.

That the cats and dogs in New York City (according to authorities) are more careful crossing streets than humans.

That Equity cards, drivers' licenses, bank books, etc., are no good as identification at the Postoffice, but the initials in your hat are.

That James Marshall, who first discovered gold in California, received a pension from the State in his old age and needed it.

That there are at least 20 sculptors living on the charity of friends. One is selling apples on 5th in the 40's.

That there are more electric lights between 44th and 47th Streets on Broadway than in the entire White Light belt.

That the first fellow ever taken for "a ride" by Shootcago badmen is now a customer's man for a Wall St. brokerage. He is also well known around Broadway for his lavish "spending" and showing off.

That butterflies taste with their legs, which are 1600 times as sensitive as the human tongue.

That the "Britannic's" dummy funnel is used as a smoking and club room by the ship's engineers. (How does he know such things?)

That Jenny Lind first named it the "parlor car."

That a Georgia man has a gadjet that straightens out bananas. Didja ever eat frozen bananas or frozen peaches? Ummmmm!

That Charlie Chaplin wept when he read one of the reports on his "City Lights" picture. Wept with joy.

That Magistrate Jean Norris, the woman judge, has prompted more people to complain about her to editors than any other person in the public eye.

That it is safer to kiss a dog than a human being.

That Washington (D. C.) poker players call three 5's "Washington Monument" because the monument is 555 ft. high.

That there is more slang in the French language than in the English. They, frinstance, have over 100 words for "money."

That the City of Tacoma is so named because in Indian it means "nearest Heaven," but Leadville, Colo., is nearest.

That the "b" in debt comes from the Latin "debita." But how comes the "s" in island, and the second "l" in Lincoln?

That words beginning with "h" that are accented on the second syllable are preceded by an—an hotel is correct. Yeah? Then how come "a hospital?"

That rialto is a combination of Italian words meaning "deep brook." Broadway, called the Rialto, uses water only for chasers.

That in Africa an audience's hisses mean what applause means to us.

That savages have been found among the South Sea Islanders so uncivilized that they did not know enough to tell a lie.

That the native Australians cut off the right thumb of a slain enemy, that his ghost might not be able to draw the bow.

That nine out of every ten happy people are uninteresting.

That the newspapers were so angry with George Washington because of "The Jay Treaty," he was called "the Step-Father of His Country."

That if you are not too large for the place you occupy, then you are too small for it. Catch on?

That the Three Graces were all old maids!

And that Miss Lyda Roberti (whose dialect won her the big honors in the "You Said It" show) may be all that the critics say she is, but since when is an accent a novelty in N. Y.?

Five Die as Storm Lashes Area in Italy

PALERMO, Italy, Feb. 23.—(AP)—Five persons died as a result of a terrific storm which lashed this district.

One, Mario Biondi, was a passenger on a train stalled on a bridge by the storm. He was washed off his feet, although scores of other passengers who held themselves afloat in the coaches as the flood waters rushed through were rescued. Many houses were damaged.

Patrol Boats Sink Two Rum Vessels

NEWPORT, R. I., Feb. 23.—(AP)—Two rum running vessels were believed to have been sunk just outside Newport Harbor early today during a running fight with Coast Guard patrol boats. Police received reports that the crews of the two boats were taken aboard Coast Guard patrol boats, which proceeded to New London, Conn.

PATRICIA PITT'S SPRIGHTLY COMMENT ON PITTSBURGH'S SOCIETY HAPPENINGS

Needlepoint Lecture to Be Given

Picturesque feudal ladies spent many days in the long winter in embroidering tapestries depicting historical scenes, and today, even in the whirligig of modern life women still find time for artistic needlework.

Their favorite handiwork is needlepoint, the art of many centuries of noble women. These society women will be guests tomorrow afternoon of the Misses Abbetts of Shenadan avenue at their studio in Oakleigh.

And Mrs. Rocco Mercuri of Toronto, an authority on needlepoint, will outline the history of the art for the guests. Mrs. Mercuri is the house guest of Mr. and Mrs. William G. Mercuri of Fifth avenue.

Travel plans during the first of the week dominate social news, and with its dramatic efforts over for a while, society folks can relax, and take time to hear what their friends are going to do.

To Visit in South

Mrs. Wallace Hurtee Rowe and her daughter, Eleanor, expect to leave the first Monday in March for the South. Accompanied by another daughter of Mrs. Rowe, Mrs. R. B. Duggan, of Toronto, they'll go to Augusta, Ga., for the remainder of the late winter season.

And Mrs. Thomas Clifton Jenkins and her daughter, Elizabeth, will leave late this week for the Cloisters, Sea Island Beach, Ga.

Announce Betrothal

Mr. and Mrs. C. Willard Gibbs, of De Victor place, announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Elinore Hamilton Gibbs, to Herman J. Brueckner, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Brueckner, of Cincinnati, O. Miss Gibbs attended Sweet Briar College and is a graduate of Cornell University. Her fiance is a graduate of Ohio State University and is at present a student at Cornell.

Mr. and Mrs. William Nesbitt Jenkins, of Mt. Lebanon, announce the marriage of their daughter, Miss Maribell Jenkins, to Paul Martin Gray, son of Mr. and Mrs. James Martin Gray, of Pittsburgh, which took place on Wednesday. Mr. Gray attended Carnegie Tech.

The Junior Pair Zedecks will hold their third annual dance on Wednesday, March 25, in the Hotel Schenley. Miss Helen Sherman is chairman of tickets.

Mrs. E. G. Moren, of Meriden street, Duquesne Heights, and her daughter, Miss Eleanor Moren, left Monday, February 16, for Washington, later to go to St. Petersburg, Fla., where they will be the guests of Capt. and Mrs. James Moren at their Miami Beach home. Miss Moren will compete in a number of golf tournaments in Florida.

Mr. and Mrs. William H. Kinley, of Amabelle street, Mt. Washington, announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Leona Kinley, to Robert S. Connolly, son of Mr. and Mrs. James B. Connolly, of Hallock street, Mt. Washington. The wedding will take place the latter part of June.

In the hope of interesting Pittsburgh women in the Brownie "packs" which are rapidly increasing throughout the country, Miss Julia Williamson, national "field owl" of the Girl Scouts, will give a training course in "Brownie" leadership Wednesday, Thursday and Friday.

Brownies are girls from 7 to 11 years of age who wear a costume peculiar to themselves and have their own laws and promises but are under the general direction of the Girl Scout National Council.

The purpose of the Brownies is to make the girl a better Scout, Miss Williamson explains. The child finds make-believe and magic in the games all leading, without her realizing it, to character-building and mind-training. The three-day training course will be held at the Congress of Clubs with sessions both morning and afternoon.

BRIMMED AND BRIMLESS HATS TO BE STYLE THIS SPRING

—Sketched in Paris—

Paris Bureau, Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph.

PARIS, Feb. 23.—One does not have to be a magician to draw interesting things out of a hat. Charm, chic and originality form the important trio that lurk within the smart lines of the new spring hats. And once again we are permitted a surprisingly wide latitude of style. Those who feel at their best in a small hat, of the toque variety, say, or a small brimmed affair, can indulge in their favorite bonnet without feeling that they are in any way out of the picture.

* * *

AND THE woman wearing a hat with a wide brim will be able to peer fearlessly forth from beneath its becoming shadows with the secure feeling that she too represents the last word in millinery circles. It certainly is wise of the modistes to allow such variety, for it provides a splendid stimulant to the millinery trade. For when there is a wide variety from which to choose, ever so many women select several models, each one of a different type. But when but a small choice obtains, we are prone to buy just a couple of hats of the current type favored and let it go at that. And so it would seem that the hat trick has scored signally this season.

* * *

* * *

THE SECOND model is in marked contrast to the first. Their only point of resemblance is that they are both by Mme. Jose. The small, tailored toque is of black wool and straw, which is drawn into soft folds at each side. In the rather high draping to the left nestle two little soft white feather breasts.

Joan Bennett to Portray General's Daughter Opposite Baxter

By HARRISON CARROLL

HOLLYWOOD, Feb. 23.

A long term Fox contract is said to be in the offing for the blonde Joan Bennett.

At any rate she will play the leading role opposite Warner Baxter in the forthcoming production of "Axile P... Bennett is the author of the story which relates the love affair of a French prisoner in a German detention camp and the daughter of a Prussian general.

For the time being the story is known as "Surrender."

Joan Bennett

EXPANSION

Over at First National this week the administration buildings were shaken by an explosion on the back lot.

"What is that?" cried every one.

TEN YEARS AGO TODAY

Raymond Griffith was scenario editor for Mack Sennett.

Metro was reported to have paid the sensational price of $250,000 for the film rights to "Turn to the Right."

Irvin S. Cobb was in Hollywood writing a Will Rogers silent comedy, "Boys Will Be Boys."

LATEST GOSSIP

El Brendel

Raoul Walsh is growing a mustache and will become an actor again in "Women of All Nations."

Universal has signed John Brody, and for publicity's sake will re-christen him Steve.

Herman Mankiewicz, the scenarist, is the latest to go to a hospital to get a rest. . . . Charles Lawrence, who plays the dumb Dr. Lewis in the local version of "Once in a Lifetime," has been signed by Universal to make a series of shorts.

A GOOD INVESTMENT

It often pays to play a hunch.

Some years ago a young man named Barry Connors decided to forsake the practice of law and to follow his natural bent, the theater. He wrote a vaudeville sketch, "The Thumb Buster," which was so promising that it brought an unusual offer. Edward Esmonde, a vaudevillian, said he believed Connors could write plays and agreed to stake him while he learned how.

Under this odd arrangement, the young writer came out to California, got a cabin in the high Sierras and in five years had written five plays. What is more, on returning to Broadway, he was able to sell three of them.

Since then, he has written several successes, including "The Patsy."

Connors, today, is in Hollywood and has just written "Women of All Nations" for Fox.

Esmonde, his backer, is here, too. He now has retired from vaudeville to become Connors' manager. He gets one-half of all that Connors makes from his writing.

Another of the "Our Dancing Daughters" series is being written at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer by Delmar Daves, who was responsible for the rest of these popular films.

VAUDEVILLE FUN AND "THE RIGHT OF WAY" AT THE DAVIS

By GEORGE SEIBEL

Florie Levere is the most entertaining feature in the Davis vaudeville program this week, though Ray and Harrison get more laughter by some rather unrefined horseplay. Miss Levere's seance in the box before the play, when she powders her nose and her "husband" proceeds to shave, is one of the wittiest comedy skits of its kind. And her boy impersonations have dash and charm.

George Seibel

Acts like that of Ray and Harrison, which undoubtedly fill a want, come closer to circus clowning than to stage art. And, speaking of the circus, there's Don Colleano, who was here last under the big top, doing his marvelous tight-rope tumbling with sure feet and easy grace.

DANCE LEGENDS

Gracella and Theodore present a dance act as the closing number which would not be unworthy of the Chauve Souris. The cat and dog concert is preciously ridiculous, while the gorilla scene in the Hottentot kraal has a thrill of the grotesque in its daring.

Undoubtedly the public has taken to the vaudeville feature of the new Davis policy, and the management are wise in keeping up the standard, perhaps even raising it.

GILBERT PARKER FILM

The screen feature is a talking picture of Gilbert Parker's once-best-seller, "The Right of Way," with that gentleman of the screen, Conrad Nagel, playing Charlie Steele. Loretta Young is Rosalie, the girl in the frontier postoffice who wins the heart of Beauty Steele.

It is a well-made picture, deserving special praise because the producers have not thought it necessary to invent a happy ending.

The polished sarcasm of Steele is well aimed, and he makes the character seem psychologically true where Sir Gilbert failed. Besides there are picturesque scenes of the Canadian wilds with good photography. It is a film that shows the screen at its best—telling a story in pictures.

NEW BROADWAY PLAY WITH MRS. GLEASON

James Gleason likes pictures and Mrs. Gleason prefers the stage. Therefore, they strike a happy medium. James is acting and writing for films, and Mrs. Gleason expects to open a new play on Broadway soon. It is called "The Sob Sister," and deals with a newspaper woman's experiences. She will be the star of the production.

Mr. Gleason has written a play to follow "The Shannons of Broadway," called "The Shannons of Hollywood," which he will put before producers in New York soon.

OUR POLICEMAN HERO CUTS DOWN EXPENSE IN THE HARRIS

By CLARENCE E. GRUNDISH

The Harris has reverted to all-screen entertainment with what is heralded as a double bill. The pictures are "The Costello Case" and "Sea Devils."

"The Costello Case" is gangster stuff again. It is a duel between a pavement-pounding policeman and a big racketeer. The policeman represents the law, but he doesn't trust the law. When he gets the "goods" on a murderer, he acts as jury, judge and executioner. Ah well, it saves the state and the movies—the expense of a court trial.

CUPID IN UNIFORM

This copper figures big not only in the crime angle but in the romantic angle as well. He plays Cupid to a couple of love birds and sends them to the preacher at the final.

Tom Moore portrays the policeman. Wheeler Oakman is the racketeer, known to the cops as Mile Away Harry. Roscoe Karns wanders in and out of the story as a wisecracking newspaper reporter—the like of which isn't in captivity, and Lola Lane and Russell Hardie are the romantic pair.

THE MELODRAMATICS

The picture has the melodramatics in pretty big doses and some laughs. If you just use your eyes and ears and not your mind it isn't so difficult to swallow.

As for the other photoplay, "Sea Devils," the less said about it the better. It is old melodrama and old movie hokum at its oldest—and worst. Walter Long is present as a tough seaman and Molly O'Day is the captain's daughter. Of course, a brave hero is there, too, but we didn't catch the name.

PLACES HOME BEFORE LAWS

Lauding the greatness of George Washington for the foresight that has left his work indelible on the nation, the Rev. John P. Treacy, of Cleveland, emphasized the home rather than laws as the fountain source of human existence last night in the Sacred Heart Church.

Asserting no man was ever made moral or just through law alone, Father Treacy said:

"As we have multiplied laws so we have lessened the sanction on which all law receives its value; as we have tampered with the home, to a large extent ruined it entirely through divorce; as we have tried to educate the mind of the child and legislated against the training of his heart and soul; whereas the fear of God is the beginning of wisdom; so we have marked a period of material development wherein all the great thinkers and leaders admit that unless there is a reawakening of spiritual life our nation is doomed."

Mrs. Coolidge broke a bottle over President Coolidge on Saturday. On the second alarm we discovered it was the boat.

Spain is now in the melting pot stage where there is nothing to melt and somebody has stolen the pot.

Alfonso has been a good king. As kings go.

And they go. He loved his country. Especially the suburbs.

It was a brilliant stroke of diplomatic shadow boxing when Alfonso asked Guerra to become his prime minister. But the Spaniards want to start a republic and grow up with Wall street.

Which means another constitution for the boys to tack amendments on. We believe the Republican form of government is ideal. But you can't make Raskob believe that.

Alfonso has reached the almost prohibitive age of 45, king and prince.

He didn't have to tag any bases to get there. He was born right on home plate.

And we have a soft-footed opinion that Alfonso is tired of it all.

He is sick of being a king. He wants a career.

If Spain becomes and remains a republic it means the dignified old Iberian Peninsula is merged. Manuel left Portugal some years ago under circumstances that made plenty of gasoline the nectar of the gods.

It has been almost 440 years to the split century since Columbus grabbed Isabella's jewels and lammed. Ferdinand knew all about it. But he didn't want to mention it.

If he asked who gave the jewels to Columbus he would have also had to inquire who gave the jewels to Isabella.

That's how history is made. By ignoring the warp and concentrating on the woof.

La Roi has been getting its ears knocked loose in the last few years, but Alfonso has an edge on another gentleman of the same name. He can get out of the racket.

That old yell of "Make way for the king" still holds good. But it means the exit.

SIDEWALKS of PITTSBURGH

By William Pfarr

Forgetting temporarily our complaint against the wild and reckless younger generation we have been working up a proper indignation on chop suey. It is nothing less than a disgrace the manner in which the American eating places of this town disregard the well-being of chop suey admirers.

It is not that the restaurants don't serve chop suey, but when you ask for the accompanying soy sauce the waitress invariably will apportion just a drop or two from a precious bottle and then flee with bottle and all.

Now, how can anybody enjoy chop suey with one or two drops of soy? A dozen drops, yes, or, better still, two dozen drops. But chop suey with just one or two drops of soy isn't chop suey at all but something else.

Let us all put our shoulders to the wheel and push until we have relieved this chop-suey-soy situation. Cooperation will bring wonderful results. If every chop suey admirer would complain to the restaurant manager, or write a letter to his congressman, things would soon be better.

A young woman in Bellevue doesn't realize the sacrifice a young man from Glenshaw made for her a few nights ago. They were out together. When they started home the Walter Raleigh hired a taxicab because it was raining.

Now taxicab rides to Bellevue are not only long but costly. And a half-hour after he had deposited the young lady safely at her doorstep he walked to the North Side Police Station and asked Desk Sergt. Dave Coughly for a bed for the night. He not only had spent virtually all his nickels, but missed the last street car as well.

Society people have their troubles, too, even as the rest of us. Recently one of Pittsburgh's real leaders of society had trouble with her piano. She thought it wasn't in tune, so she called in the piano tuner. The piano tuner fooled around for a while and then said he couldn't find anything wrong. The lady insisted, so he went over it again. Finally he found a tooth bouncing over the strings and he handed it to the lady. She said she had lost it three years ago.

The walls of the office of Tom McMahon, the chief city clerk assessor, are hidden beneath photographs taken by McMahon himself. He changes the pictures frequently and gives the old ones to friends. Photography is his hobby. Once he went all the way to Vermont to photograph the eclipse. He has excellent photographs, taken by himself, of the Koppers Building at night, Washington Monument, the Capitol and the Congressional Library. Once he won a prize with pictures he had taken of the city parks buried in snow. When he was on vacation last summer, he spent $80 in taxicab bills going to the woods to take pictures.

Exposition Hall, hidden at the Point, near the end of Duquesne way, presents an uninviting, dismal appearance these days, especially to the men and women who were boys and girls 20 years ago. Then the annual exposition was the big treat of the late summer season. It ran for six weeks and every school kid in the city and county was treated to a day at Expo. The property was owned by the city and its concessions sold. An exposition society, headed by Howard Heinz, was in charge. A merry-go-round was there, the inviting mill in which the more daring youngster took his girl for a ride and stole a pecking kiss, the slides—everything, in fact, which goes to make up an outdoor park today. And who among you desn't remember that stirring spectacle which so alarmed the impressionable —"Fighting the Flames?"

WILL ROGERS SAYS

HOLLYWOOD, Cal., Feb. 23.

To the Editor, Sun-Telegraph:

Here is what George Washington missed by not living to his one hundred and ninty-ninth birthday. He would have seen our great political system of "equal rights to all and privileges to none" working so smoothly that seven million are without a chance to earn their living. He would see 'em handing out rations in peace time that would have reminded him of Valley Forge. In fact we have reversed the old system. We all get fat in war times and thin durin; peace. I bet after seeing us, he would sue us for calling him "father."

Will Rogers

Yours, WILL.

'HYMIE' CLUE ENTANGLES POLICEMAN

Oakland District Patrolman Accused of Concealing Woman Sought as 'Key'

A city policeman, Louis Lefkowitz, of 5808 Forward avenue, attached to the Oakland Station, has become involved in the investigation of "Pittsburgh" Hymie Martin, extradited to Cleveland last week in connection with the slaying of ex-Councilman William E. Potter.

Detectives suspect Lefkowitz is shielding a woman who is in hiding in Pittsburgh and who is believed to hold Hymie's fate in her hands.

According to Lieut. Frank Ferris, of the homicide squad, Lefkowitz, who was quizzed Saturday night, is withholding information. Unless he tells what he knows, Ferris said today, he will ask Public Safety Director James M. Clark to summon Lefkowitz before a trial board.

Ferris said Mary Outland, alias "Mary from Akron," on February 12 left the Morrowfield Hotel apartments, where he said she had been staying with "Pittsburgh Hymie," and that night went to the home of a sister, Anna Lefkowitz, wife of the policeman. Ferris explained:

"Mary Outland is the key-woman to this whole affair. She has valuable information concerning Hymie's movements before and after the murder. We will have her in custody within the next 48 hours."

An air mail plane today is bringing Cleveland detectives a latch key found yesterday among clothing left in the Morrowfield apartments, it was said, by Hymie and Mary.

The key may definitely link "Pittsburgh Hymie" with the Cleveland death apartment, in which Potter's bullet-riddled body was found. If the key fits Potter's apartment the web of evidence will be woven tightly around "Pittsburgh Hymie."

Pershing Lauds First Division's Nerve Under Fire

MY EXPERIENCES IN THE WORLD WAR

By JOHN J. PERSHING

Commander-in-Chief, American Expeditionary Forces

Succeeding chapters of "My Experiences in the World War" will appear daily and Sunday exclusively in the Sun-Telegraph.

CHAPTER XLIII.

A strong German offensive opened May 27, 1918, against the French, with the famous Big Bertha firing on Paris.

The position of the 1st Division was near Cantigny. The 1st Division had been in line nearly a month opposite the town of Cantigny, near the point of farthest advance of the enemy in the Amiens salient.

Gen. Pershing.

Although some weeks had passed since my offer of troops, in the emergency, up to now none had been called upon to take part in active operations. The reason appeared to be that the Allies were skeptical of the ability of any of our units to conduct an offensive. The opportunity now came, however, to remove misgivings on that score.

The French corps in which the First was serving had prepared a counter-attack to be launched in the Amiens sector about the middle of May in case of another offensive by the enemy in Flanders, which it was believed would occur between May 15 and 20.

The counter-attack was to be directed due east toward the heights of Montdidier, with the advance of the First Division, supported by a French division on each flank, as a preliminary move. This was to be followed in 48 hours by a general advance northward of the entire Third French Army, which covered the front from Montdidier to Noyon.

Ammunition dumps had been filled, special trenches dug, new battery emplacements prepared for the reinforcing artillery, and necessary orders issued for the counter-attack, but the enemy did not put in his appearance according to the forecast.

It was then decided that the 1st Division should undertake to improve its position. The Germans on its front continued to hold the advantage of higher ground, from which they were able to inflict constant losses on our troops while suffering little damage themselves.

Americans Enthusiastic

Another reason was that at this moment the morale of the Allies required that American troops make their appearance in battle. It was advisable also from the point of view that, if successful, it would demonstrate that we could best help the Allies by using our troops in larger units instead of adopting their plan of building up Allied units. The high pitch of enthusiasm with which the division entered into the preparations for this attack gave us confidence that the result would be satisfactory.

The Cantigny sector at this time was very active, with artillery fire unusually heavy, and the preparations for the attack by the 1st Division, which had to be hastily made, were carried out under great difficulty. Many casualties occurred during the construction of jumping-off trenches, emplacements and advance command posts.

The 28th Infantry, under Col. Hanson E. Ely, designated for the assault, was reinforced by machine guns, engineers and other special units. Additional French artillery was sent to assist the artillery brigade of the division, and particularly to suppress the hostile batteries attempting to interfere with the consolidation of the new position after it should be captured.

Col. Ely

On the morning of May 28, after a brief artillery preparation, the infantry advanced on a front of a mile and a quarter. The village of Cantigny and the adjacent heights were quickly taken, relatively heavy casualties inflicted on the enemy and about 300 prisoners captured. Our troops behaved splendidly and suffered but slight loss in the actual attack.

Events then developing farther east, however, were seriously to complicate the success.

The German assault in force against the French along the Chemin des Dames, between Soissons and Rheims, began on the morning of the twenty-seventh and was making dangerous headway. By the morning of the twenty-eighth the gains of the enemy were such that the French High Command was compelled to relieve much of the re-enforcing artillery behind the 1st Division and transfer it to that front.

Hold Enemy at Bay

The enemy's artillery within range of Cantigny thus became superior to ours and was able to concentrate a terrific fire on the unsheltered troops in the captured positions. His reaction against our troops was extremely violent, and apparently he was determined at all cost to counteract the excellent effect the American success had produced upon the Allies.

Under cover of heavy bombardment a series of counter-attacks were made by the enemy, but our young infantrymen stood their ground and broke up every attempt to dislodge them. The regiment sustained severe casualties from the large caliber shells poured down upon it and had to be re-enforced by a battalion each from the 18th and 26th Regiments.

It was a matter of pride to the whole A. E. F. that the troops of this division, in their first battle, and in the unusually trying situation that followed, displayed the fortitude and courage of veterans, held their gains and denied to the enemy the slightest advantage.

It is interesting to record that of the officers in the 1st to participate in this battle Maj. Gen. Bullard was later to command an army, with rank of lieutenant general; Brig. Gens. Summerall and Hines were promoted to the grade of major general and later commanded army corps; Brig. Gen. Buck became a major general and commanded a division; Col. Ely became a major general and division commander; Col. Parker a brigadier general and division commander, and Bamford a major general and division commander.

Gen. Summerall.

Two members of the division staff, Cols. King and Marshall, were to become chiefs of staff of army corps. Other officers then with the division would have un-

COUNCIL TO ACT IN GARBAGE SUIT

A resolution to quash court action on the city's $1,000,000 refund suit against the American Reduction Company, is expected to be acted upon tomorrow by Council.

City Solicitor Charles A. Waldschmidt announced several days ago he had reached an agreement with the company whereby the suit would be settled for $481,338.08. Permission of Council is required to quash the court action. Waldschmidt, immediately after announcing terms of settlement, started preparing the resolution.

The city is to be paid $300,000 cash. In addition the reduction company is to discharge its claim for disposal of rubbish and garbage for December, 1928, pursuant to the contract for that year. This item totals $106,338.08. The remaining $75,000 will be paid on terms of agreement to be made by Council.

The suit was entered by the city when the American Reduction Company refused to return money on a cost-plus agreement for garbage and rubbish collected between 1921 and 1928. The suit was instituted by Henry Oliver Evans, former city controller.

Suspect Prank in Finding Of Grave and Casket

County detectives today were investigating what they believed to be a college prank in the finding of a freshly dug grave on a hill near McKelvey Lane at Edgewood Acres yesterday. The grave contained a large black coffin in which a police dog was buried.

The grave was discovered by O. Robertson, of 4739 Bayard street, and Henry Daniels, 5616 Mignonette street. Negroes, who were exercising their dogs on the hill. Nearby were found five black robes, made of cheesecloth. The top of a small bush at the head of the grave had been lopped off in the manner of a marker.

County detectives, Forest Hills and Wilkinsburg police, who were notified, dug the grave open and found a large black coffin containing the body of a police dog. Because of the cheapness of the material of which the robes were made and the elaborate care taken in making the coffin, police were inclined to believe it a college prank.

CHURCH MASS MEETINGS DENOUNCE ATTACK ON BLUE LAWS

'OPEN SABBATH' HELD MORAL MENACE

Sunday Sports, Amusements Under Fire; Fight Planned On Bills in Legislature

Bills pending in the Legislature for modification of Pennsylvania's blue laws were denounced as inimical to Christian ideals and as forming "an opening wedge for what would soon be an open Sabbath," at 11 mass meetings held in churches here yesterday under auspices of the Sabbath Association of Western Pennsylvania. Trie

Resolutions of protest against proposed modifications were adopted at all the meetings, six of which were held in the afternoon and five last night. The bill of Representative Michael A. Musmanno was the center of attack, but all three measures proposing changes in the laws were denounced as un-American and anti-Christian and destructive of the moral support of law and order.

MORAL DAMAGE SEEN

The resolutions declared the Wettach bill for Sunday amusements and sports with paid admissions and the Ingram bill to permit Sunday baseball would "undermine the spiritual ideals and morals of our youth." Collections were taken and pledge cards distributed for the support of the fight against the modifications.

The mass meetings were held in the North Side, South Hills, Homewood, Wilkinsburg, Mt. Washington, West View, Lawrenceville, Hazelwood and Ben Avon. The Rev. Dr. George Taylor, Jr., president of the association, declared the program of meetings had been carried out successfully. In addition to the mass meetings, ministers in a number of districts in the city and county made individual protests at their services.

WASHINGTON QUOTED

The resolution adopted follows:

"We are unalterably opposed to any legislation that would weaken the safeguards of the Christian Sabbath in this state, without which society would be deprived of that religion and morality which are, in the words of George Washington, indispensable supports to our political posterity and great pillars of human happiness. Our present Sunday laws, with court decisions, are sufficiently flexible to meet the changing conditions of modern times.

"We therefore beseech our Legislature at Harrisburg to defeat all such bills and entering wedges for an open Sunday, and we hereby authorize earnest presentation of our protest to the law and order committees of the House and Senate, the Governor and others interested. Also, we protest against the bill for Sunday hunting and training of sporting dogs."

MUSIC

Yost Quartet and Henry Harris

Schenley Ballroom

PROGRAM

Quartet in D ..... Mozart
Piano Soli
Rhapsodie in G Minor ..... Brahms
Capriccio in B Minor ..... Brahms
Ballade in F Minor ..... Chopin
Henry Harris.
Quintet, Op. 51 ..... Arensky

The Yost Quartet played their third Sunday matinee in Schenley Ballroom yesterday afternoon before as large and clever an audience as has gathered during this season. Henry Harris was guest artist playing a group of solo piano works and assisting the quartet in the Arensky Quintet.

Mr. Lissfelt

The program was briefer than usual and was unusually lively, owing to the quick tempo given all the music. Every one of the performers seemed to be in haste. That hurry did not help the graceful Mozart, but the lovely and melodious Arensky swerved along to a fine climax even though it must have given the players an anxious moment now and then.

Having watched the progress of Henry Harris through many years, I am always more impressed with his potentialities than with what he actually gives to-day. I feel that he is equipped with a marvelous technique, no two ways about it. In his playing the high lights are first of all sterling rhythmic, a buried fire that will emerge more fully when Eros and some other of the gods will be whispering in his ears and a sense of worship for the finest music. He understands the classics and has learned the moderns. With repose that comes with years he must go far. The audience received him well and he responded with a gay Danse d'Olaf of Pick-Mangiagalli.

J. FRED LISSFELT.

Plan for Stabilization Of Unemployment Here Described

(The method of financial control of expenditures of the Allegheny County Emergency Association, which is in charge of the Pittsburgh Plan for the stabilization of employment, was outlined last night by Mrs. Philip Mathews, executive director of the association.)

By MAJ. PHILIP MATHEWS.

The ways and means committee will prepare its budgets for funds under the following headings: Employment, Relief, Payroll and Operating Expenses. These budgets will be submitted weekly to the operating committee, which will approve, modify or cancel them as it may determine; the office procedure will be as follows:

When the funds have been authorized by the operating committee, Mr. Hunt will be directed to deposit that amount of money to the account of the association in the Farmers Deposit Bank, which places the financial transactions of the Ways and Means Committee on a cash basis. After funds are allocated, the amount will be encumbered against that particular item, and after payments, either for relief or payroll are met, the encumbrance will be liquidated.

ARRANGE GROUPS

In the disbursement of funds for relief the appropriation to the authorized agency is divided under the headings: Food, Gas, Electricity, Fuel, Clothing, Rent, Mortgages, Medicine and Miscellaneous, and a definite amount allocated to each one of these classifications. The check for the lump sum will be sent to the agency in accordance with the amount authorized by the operating committee.

At the close of the week, the agency will submit the names of the families to whom the funds have been distributed, showing the items for which the various amounts were given, under the nine classifications mentioned above. No agency will be permitted to incur any obligations chargeable to the association in excess of the authorized allotment.

For the distribution of job funds, the procedure will be to determine the number of man days that the job will require to encumber an amount equal to the total man days.

Men will be assigned to jobs in accordance to their trade classification in so far as possible and the prevailing rate of wage will be paid. The amount of money to be paid to any man each month will be regulated by the number of days of employment that man is assigned.

GET TIME SLIPS

When men have been assigned to jobs, a time slip for that job will be prepared in this office and will be sent to the superintendent of the job. The time slips will be returned, at the close of each man's weekly employment period, and from the time slips, payrolls will be made out. Checks to be drawn for each individual and the payroll and checks delivered to the paymaster designated for each particular job.

The paymasters will be authorized paymasters of the employer and will not be paymasters of the association. On receipt of check each employe will be required to sign the payroll, which will be mailed back to the association office for use as a voucher for that payment.

The method used in classifying the employes and for the preparation of time slips and payrolls will be to punch a card for each man and by running these cards though the tabulator to prepare the rolls. Checks will be made out on high speed machines and signed by machines.

The accounts will be audited monthly by an authorized firm of certified public accountants. Financial reports will be submitted weekly to the operating committee by use of automatic devices and high speed machines. The headquarters forces will be maintained at a minimum.

HEARST PRAISED FOR DRUG WAR

By WILLIAM H. JORDAN.
Universal Service.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 23.—Incidental to the reconvening of the State Legislature tomorrow at Sacramento there was conveyed today a tribute to the Hearst newspapers and to William Randolph Hearst.

This was expressed for their "unswerving, unyielding and effective campaign against the horrible narcotic traffic evil."

It came from Senator Sanborn Young, a leading authority on narcotics, chairman for years of the state legislative narcotic committee and recognized for his official reports and his personal service as an international figure in the battle waged to suppress the illicit traffic.

Senator Young deemed it timely to make this expression in view of the approaching legislative session coming directly upon the signing by President Hoover of the act of Congress giving the Secretary of Labor authority to deport aliens convicted of peddling or smuggling contraband narcotics.

Senator Young said:

"No single agency has contributed so much to the upbuilding of law and regulation of this traffic as has the Hearst organization.

"Without its splendidly directed campaigns, aimed with certainty at the evil, we who are deeply concerned with this vital evil would have been discouraged.

"Through the Hearst newspapers the world has been given to know of the terrible menace of dope. Internationally the fight has been carried right into the biggest fields of effort to control the traffic at its source."

DISCUSS HALL SITE PROTEST

County Commissioners will consider, probably tomorrow, a protest filed by Attorney Ralph Davis, said to be in behalf of the Masons, against the building of the proposed Town Hall between Bigelow boulevard and Fifth avenue in the Schenley Farms district.

Davis' letter stated the Masons were planning to build a "cathedral" costing millions of dollars in the neighborhood but would abandon the proposition if the Town Hall were located there.

Chairman Joseph G. Armstrong of the Board of County Commissioners, said, when his attention was called to Davis' letter:

"I have not seen it but if one has been received it will be given due consideration at the next regular meeting."

Commissioners at Homestead Rally Uphold High Level Project; Throng Attends

While the commissioners made no positive statement that the bridge would be built, they displayed a favorable attitude toward the project.

MURALS IN ST. AGNES CHURCH RIVAL OTHER CITY SERIES

SPACES PROMPT PAINTER TO TASK

Loses Commission to Take Job Here; Finished Work Acclaimed Among Best

By PENELOPE REDD.

The third important series of mural paintings to be given to the public of Pittsburgh within the year, has just been completed in St. Agnes' Catholic Church on Fifth avenue near Craft.

The other two series of mural paintings, the Boardman-Robinson group, depicting the Romance of Commerce in Kaufmann's and the Mathurin Meheut group devoted to the Romance of Old Sea Ports in the new Heinz auditorium building, have been widely acclaimed.

Penelope Redd

Felix Lieftuchter, the painter of the St. Agnes murals, having studied architecture, found that architectural spaces filled him with the desire to decorate them with mural paintings.

GOES TO GERMANY

Consequently, he commenced to study painting with Frank Duveneck in Cincinnati. Then he went to Germany, where an endeavor was under way to discard the reiteration of late Renaissance types of painting for church murals. The movement aspired to a more austere and spiritual kind of painting.

Lieftuchter, who had known the late John T. Comes, of Comes, Perry and McMullen, said:

"When I saw the spaces in St. Agnes, I felt them made for mural embellishment. As a matter of fact, I lost an important commission that matured at the time I commenced these murals, last spring. I shall always want to design a church with the ideal spaces for mural paintings."

The mural paintings in St. Agnes add the elan of life itself to the beautifully proportioned nave of the Romanesque church. Commencing with strange harmonies of color applied as a plain dado, and repeated on the arches of the clerestory with conventionalized designs, the interest is, of course concentrated on the rich decorative scheme of the apse.

Here the major prophets of the Old Testament, the Four Evangelists, the Doctors of the Church, Eve attended by the great women of the Old Testament, and the Virgin Mary surrounded by virgin martyrs led by St. Agnes, form a pageant dominated by the figure of God, magnificent yet tender. Quotations from the Apocalypse articulate the grandeur of the plan.

MARKED WITH SPLENDOR

The color of the paintings is orchestrated into tremendous themes impossible to analyze in so brief a space.

There is a splendor about the whole that reveals what painting may be when freed from the tyranny of the conventional exhibition gallery.

Mr. Lieftuchter has not made his figures reminiscent of any period. They are not archaic emulations of either the Byzantine or of the School of Giotto. They are designed particularly for the place. Formal, though they be, and exact as to Christian iconography, there is an underlying quality of emotion completely modern.

Felix Lieftuchter has used "keim-mineral" color, a pigment that is mixed with a special liquid to cause the same chemical reaction to the air as did the old method of painting fresco in wet plaster.

Mr. Lieftuchter is now in Toledo, O., painting the murals in the Toledo Cathedral, which was designed by William R. Perry, of Pittsburgh.

DISTRICT VETS FAVOR CASH BONUS

Letters Tell of Forgotten Debt to Soldiers; Cite Pittance Paid and Want

Letters by veterans of the World War from all parts of the Tri-State district are being received by the Sun-Telegraph, advancing arguments for the cash bonus bill just passed by the United States Senate.

Most of the letters assert soldiers were underpaid during the war and that, with the conflict ended, the country has forgotten the need of paying its debt to the former "doughboy."

Excerpts from some of the letters are:

ANSON L. McCRAY, Freedom, Pa.: The bonus represents in small part the difference between the exorbitant wages the inactive man received in this country and the mere pittance the active man received in France during the war. In America a man worked with steel, food and clothing; in France, we worked in blood with death. The penalty for coming home, as a few of us did, physically fit, is a chance to starve to death.

HUGH D. THOMAS, Washington, Pa.: I dare say that there are veterans, at this very moment, some with families, who haven't a crust of bread or a place to sleep. Still Mr. Mellon fights against this great cause. Will he please tell me what he knows about suffering in the great conflict?

H. C. JONES, Aliquippa, Pa.: Look at the men who died over there; more especially, look at our comrades who are crippled for life at home today. They never will be any good to themselves or anyone else. Just to help our country when it needed us and for a lousy dollar a day. Mr. Mellon will never have to go to anyone's back door and ask for something to eat, as I know a lot of our ex-service men have.

FROM "A VETERAN," Ellwood City: I consider it a stroke of good fortune that, at the present time, I am not in great need of a cash bonus nearly as much as some of my buddies, but I often have visions of how I could make a fairly substantial down payment on a little home for my wife and kiddo if I were to receive in cash the remainder of what was once a $1,584 certificate and which no doubt will go the same way as the previous loans—"up the flue."

CARL A. HOLMSTROM, 335 Fingal Street: How nice it is to see and read your comments on assisting those who braved the submarines, the airplanes and the guns in our late war.

WILLIAM S. CHILDS, Greensburg: Why wait and let thousands of these veterans die in poverty when it can all be avoided now, by turning a deaf ear to such men as Mellon and pay us our little just debt now. This debt, paid, will save many a life.

JOSEPH A. KOCH, Aliquippa, Pa.: Boil down all the excuses offered by our leaders in Washington and the answer is plainly a case of refusing a drowning man help because he is plainly dumb and will die some other way, anyhow.

All Saints Church Cornerstone Laid

Clergymen from many sections of Pittsburgh yesterday attended the cornerstone laying of the $85,000 All Saints' Episcopal Church, McClure and Davis avenues. Bishop Alexander Mann, of the Pittsburgh diocese, presided. Others taking part were the Rev. Walter J. Marshfield, pastor of the church, and Charles S. Shoemaker, junior warden and chairman of the building committee. The first building of the congregation was erected in 1906, and was torn down last May to make way for the Ohio River boulevard.

Henry to College!

That's the way his mother puts it. Really, though, we are doing no such thing. We're establishing no foundations, no fellowships, no scholarships. We're just plodding along—simple grocers—doing our best—selling housewives their tapioca and Bermuda onions, their maraschino cherries and Idaho potatoes, their chili sauce and their porterhouse steaks—generally for less money than they pay elsewhere. (Sometimes a little less—oftener a good bit less.) Henry's mother's bill averaged $72 a month before she started trading with the A & P. Since then it's been $60 a month—and the food, she'll have you know, is better! That $12 a month over the years runs into real money.

TELL IT TO SALLY

By SALLY MARTIN

If He Really Loves You He'll Protect You

To [illegible] love," he wanted [illegible] herself to him, w[illegible] sisted [illegible] at all [illegible] poor [illegible] confusi[illegible] right not be right.

"What [illegible] she wailed. "I do [illegible]

"Slam the [illegible] on him!" says Arlette, speaking from bitter experience [illegible] before you find yourself [illegible] like I am —deserted, wondering where he is, and who he's stalling now!

"I know [illegible] how you feel. When a girl [illegible] and in love, no matter how worthless a man is, she is apt [illegible] believe what he tells her. But don't, Cassie! Don't!

Still Waiting

"I know what I am talking about. I was 18, too, when I met a man—my first and last love—who had the same ideas your Franks got. I listened to him and fell for his line . . . the same line Frank's feeding you. I was ashamed to ask anyone's advice, and I was so afraid of losing him. So I made myself think he was right, that if I loved him, I would be glad to "prove it." Well, I proved it.

"And now listen to the result: Six years have passed and I am still waiting for him to do his proving, and to keep his promise of marriage.

"I am blaming myself for the mess I'm in. Because, down in my heart I really knew all the time I should have demanded that he 'prove' himself by marrying me first. Cassie you and lots of other foolish girls, don't stop to realize that if a man honestly loves you and respects you, he'll want to do that. He'll be willing to prove himself and not ask sacrifices of you. He will want to give you his name and try to make a happy home for you. He won't try to take advantage of your love for him by asking you to do things that you think are wrong, or that would disgrace you if the world knew about them.

Same Experience

"You may lose your Frank, if you refuse to listen to him . . . But think how much ahead I would be today if I had lost the man I was crazy about, instead of wrecking my own peace of mind trying to hang onto him! If you ever want your own little home, slam the door right in his face!"

That's a dreadful picture . . . But it's a picture of what may easily happen to you if you allow yourself to fall for a line like that. And the Franks don't always pass out of the picture, if you use your head and tell 'em where to get off. Betty's didn't.

"I'm awfully sorry for Cassie," Betty cries, and I'm writing this letter to tell her to not be foolish. I know what I'm talking about, because the same thing happened to me.

"My boy friend wanted me to prove my love, too. And did I? I should say not! I told him that if I couldn't prove my love to him in some other way, we were through! Did he go? No, he didn't! I am still going with him. I have been for seven months, and we're both happy. You see, dear, it pays to be good. And that fellow has some nerve saying what he did to you! When I refused my sweetheart, he said he was sorry to bringing up such a silly argument.

"Girlie, get wise. What a fellow can't have he wants. If they think anything of you to begin with they'll think more of you for being good. I am only 18, too, but I've found that out!"

Then here's Boots. Like Arlette, she "proved" herself. To be sure, the boy friend didn't walk out on her. He married her, but—

"Cassie's pitiful letter has given me courage to tell my story," she begins. "I want her to read my letter, so she'll know what happens when a man asks what her B. F. asked.

"As I read her story, my heart filled with hatred for that scoundrel who pretends he loves her, because I was once in the same predicament. I, too, was 18, just entering womanhood and, not unlike Cassie, very green and believing. I, too, tried to send him away, but I weakened under his tears and pleading. 'Well, why not?' I thought. 'I shall marry him some day.'

Deserts Husband

"This went on for several months. And you know the story. I thought I had to marry him. I thought my mother wouldn't understand, so we slipped away. We were forgiven for eloping. Then I found that my alarm had been in vain. And oddly enough, I felt hatred for the man who had taken advantage of me. On top of that, I found he had 'wronged' two other girls. That was the last straw. For days I was in the very depths of despair. Finally, after two months of jealous abuse, I left him. I'm with my parents now . . . the finest and most understanding in the whole world.

"Since marrying him I've met five men . . . men who really respect women, who are really worth loving and who don't ask such sacrifices. Please, please, Cassie! Don't waste your time on this wretched creature. He isn't worth it," concludes Boots.

"I'll marry him some day anyway!" Are you falling for a line like Frank's with that thought in your heart? If you are watch your step! It may buy you desertion as it bought Arlette . . . or despair like it bought Boots.

If your man really loves you, he'll want to protect both your heart and your good name. He'll want to put a roof over his love!

Office Romances Don't Wear So Well in Real Life, View of Fay King

By FAY KING

Office romances make good reading, but one does not see so much of it in real life.

Men are concentrating creatures. When they think of business they do not think of love.

Women can work and think of love at the same time. They will ever be more heart than head.

A heavy office romance usually involves the girl in shady business transactions. Her boss depends upon her love to protect him when the time comes.

Men are more apt to be sincerely inclined to romance during their leisure hours among their social associates.

Madge Announces Noel's Engagement to Mary

I was thankful for Lillian's muttered warning of Philip Veritzen's entrance into the hotel dining room, for it enabled me to preserve a "poker face" when my employer came over to our table and paused beside it. Fresh in my memory was the absurd thing he had said when I had told him that I had not yet rejected his proffered bouquet for my green gown. He had murmured something fantastic about my indecision giving a fillip to his imagination, a suspense which he should enjoy. He had hung up the telephone before I could answer him, and if I had been unprepared for his appearance I am afraid I should have betrayed my confusion.

"Lo, Phil!" Lillian seized the situation and commanded it to my infinite relief. "Sorry we can't squeeze you in at this table, but we're already four and that's the tightest fit known to hotel tables. But sit down as near us as you can. What's on the well-known mind?"

Mr. Veritzen bowed impressively, looked from Lillian to me.

"I am only insuring my promptness at my meeting with Mrs. Graham," he said, and managed to invest his speech with a confidential little air of understanding between us which annoyed me exceedingly.

"You are more prompt than I," I said with a casual air ignoring the meaning glance he sent me. "But really Mrs. Underwood has but just returned with a description of the gowns to be worn tonight. While you lunch she and I will make out the list so that we will not have to delay you any longer than necessary."

I tried to register the conviction that he had only come to our table to find out about the gowns for which he was sending flowers, and Lillian slyly telegraphed me a "bravo." But Mr. Veritzen was not to be dismissed so easily.

"Please do not hurry," he said. "You are not delaying me in the least. Indeed, I only came in here for luncheon to pass the time before two, when I expect the flowers I ordered."

There was a smug little air of complacence about him which was maddening. He reminded me suddenly of a plump spider sitting in the center of his web and tentatively touching the different silvery strands to see what unwary victim had been drawn toward him. It was an absurd and fantastic comparison, but it remained in my mind when after our luncheon was ended Lillian took Mary back to our apartment with the promise to put her to bed, and Harry Underwood announced his intention of sleeping straight through the afternoon.

"Unless," he amended cheerily, "either of you gals needs me, when I shall be 'Arry on the spot,' every bit as good as the historic 'Johnny'."

"Better," I told him, smiling, and felt an absurd little inclination to call him back and ask him to keep close to me while Mr. Veritzen remained in the room. But as we were the last in the dining room, Mr. Seibel came up to us as soon as the Underwoods left and my unreasoning little panic left me.

"The florist's wagon is at the service entrance," he told me, "with your palms and flowering plants, and there are several boys here from another establishment with huge boxes of flowers."

"Ah!" said Mr. Veritzen, and I had an eerie impression that he was rubbing his hands together, although they really were motionless. "Those are the chaps I want to see. Where are they bringing the flowers?"

Mr. Seibel looked at me, adroitly elbowing Mr. Veritzen out of the conversation.

They will be put on the tables in the room just back of this," he said, "where you will have your dinner tonight and where your musicians will be stationed. You see after the dining room is closed tonight the two rooms will be thrown together and the floors waxed. But as I told you, all the decorations must be up by five o'clock, when the waitresses come back to arrange their tables."

"They will be," I said quietly, and then Mr. Veritzen struck in again assertively.

"Are the flowers there now? I want to have them opened before the boys go back. They may have to be sent back."

Not a facial muscle of Mr. Seibel's moved, but I felt a compulsion to explain Mr. Veritzen's interference.

"Mr. Veritzen is munificently sending the cut flowers for the party," I said to Mr. Seibel airily and smiling at both men with a desperate attempt at archness. "You see, I am giving the party for our niece, Miss Harrison, who is engaged to Mr. Veritzen's son, and who is also a stage protege of his."

I fairly held my breath as I finished this daring little speech. What would my employer say?

How to Keep Well

By DR. ROYAL S. COPELAND

Immunization Valuable in Preventing Typhoid

Immunization against typhoid fever has been demonstrated to be of great value. Its results have shown the advantages that properly directed public health activities have accomplished.

Dr. Copeland

Typhoid fever used to be very common. During the Spanish - American War it caused more suffering than did Spanish bullets. This disease is rarely if ever found in the army today. All soldiers in the army receive injections of typhoid fever vaccine.

In addition to this means of affecting protection, sanitary control has done wonders. We may prevent the occurrence of typhoid fever by not permitting material contaminated with typhoid germs to enter our systems.

The germs are found in places where people are careless about sewage disposal. It is one penalty for failing to keep the water and milk supplies free from infection. Typhoid is a filth disease. Its occurrence represents ignorance or indifference on the part of some careless individual.

Among the signs of this disease are loss of appetite, coated tongue, and intense headache. Occasionally there occurs nosebleed. Nausea and diarrhoea are common signs. With these symptoms are severe aching of the back and legs. The fever rises one degree daily for about a week, continues for a time, and the disease usually runs its course in four weeks.

Victims of typhoid fever should be given hospital care wherever possible. They will receive far better attention than is possible to give in most homes. At a hospital the patient is isolated with ease and there is no danger of spreading the disease to others.

The patient must be isolated until 10 days after the temperature reaches normal, and an examination must be made by the local department of health if the patient has been kept at home.

If you plan to visit the country or to travel abroad where sanitation is poor, you should take the precaution that is given our soldiers. You should be immunized against this disease. The procedure is simple and protects for a period of three to four years.

In view of the number of "typhoid carriers," many of them ignorant of the dangers they spread, it is well to be immunized. One never knows when he will be exposed to this disease. Anyhow, talk with your doctor about it.

The Beauty Box

By HELEN FOLLETT

Gray hair won't stand for any nonsense. It should be beautifully arranged, without any tootsy hairdressing innovations. Very seldom does white hair appear to advantage unwaved. It needs the softening influence of undulations. Artistic disarray is plain blowsy when it appears upon the head that has silvered and frosted, which should carry a dignified and distinguished coiffure, regal and splendid.

Lifting the eyebrows will eventually put crosswise furrows in the forehead. To combat them, anoint with a heavy massage cream and treat them to rotary massage movements, beginning at one temple and scudding along toward the other one. Another effective treatment is to rub crosswise with the finger ends, going up with one hand and down with the other at the same time.

CORRECT MANNERS

By MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

Congratulating the Debutante.

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Kindly advise me whether it is customary or proper to present the hostess with a gift at her coming-out party? It has been more or less the cause of discussion among my friends.

MISS F.

As our social gesture of congratulation to the debutante, we usually send flowers. These flowers are very important to the debutante, for they are used to make her "background," a floral expression of the good wishes of her friends.

If you are a close relative or a close friend, you will probably wish to give her also some small gift to commemorate the important event, but this isn't necessary, nor is it very much done.

Acknowledging the Acquaintance of a Man

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

My girl friend and I have had an argument and I decided that to settle it I would write to you. When a young girl of 13 meets a "boy friend" on the street, who should speak first, the boy or the girl? My friend says that he should as it is improper for a young girl to speak out of turn. I claim that the girl should speak first because if she does not care to remember the acquaintance she need not speak.

VICTORIA.

You win lady! It is logical, as you intimate, for the woman of whatever age she is, to be given the privilege of acknowledging first the acquaintance of a man, whether the gentleman is 13 or 90.

Fine Career Halted.

No Future as Player.

FANS' SYMPATHY WITH BUC OWNER

A BRILLIANT FUTURE in the executive field of the baseball realm was erased with shocking suddenness when Samuel W. Dreyfuss, vice president and treasurer of the Pittsburgh Pirates, died yesterday from pneumonia.

Sam Dreyfuss.

The only son of Barney Dreyfuss, president of the local National League baseball club, who is 66 years old today, was just a little more than half his father's age, 34, to be exact, and no man of his years ever had risen as nigh as he had in the councils of the game. With his background and his adaptability for the work, it is conceivable that in time he could have stepped into the place so long and ably filled by his illustrious parent.

The sincere sympathy of the sports world goes out to the family, and especially to the father of the young executive. Barney Dreyfuss reposed the utmost confidence in his son, as he demonstrated many times. In recent years, the elder Dreyfuss had been leaning more and more on the young man and made few moves without first consulting him, and the signs were that he planned in the end to turn over the active management of his baseball affairs to his son and heir.

BORN IN LOUISVILLE

Sam came here with his parents when Barney Dreyfuss took over the Pittsburgh club three decades ago. He had been a close follower of baseball from his earliest days and, upon his graduation from Princeton University in 1919, he entered into the business of assisting the management of the property with his father.

In 1926, the elder Dreyfuss left the club in Sam's charge while he made a trip to Europe and it was then that Sam made his first deal, bringing Pitcher Carmen Hill back to the Pirate ranks. It also was during this season that the Carey-Adams-Bigbee trouble arose, with Fred Clarke, former Pirate manager, also involved, and the young director had to steer the ship through troubled waters.

THE EXPERIENCE SERVED Sam in good stead and he demonstrated constantly developing powers of administration in the seasons that followed. Last year Barney Dreyfuss, his own health bad at the time, was in Florida while Sam plotted the spring training trip to Paso Robles, Cal., and handled the other club duties. Sam accompanied the club West and negotiated the signing of Dick Bartell, the holdout shortstop, and otherwise took command in his father's absence. He was getting ready to go away with the advance squad for this year's training grind when he was stricken ill three weeks ago. Pneumonia developed a week ago and he succumbed only after a hard fight. At his own request, the seriousness of his ailment was minimized. An improvement in his condition was noted a few days ago, but he took a turn for the worse only a few hours before death abruptly nipped his budding career yesterday.

Barney Dreyfuss.

IF AN ATTACK of fever had not laid George Moriarty low almost 15 years ago, Burleigh Grimes might never have come to the Pittsburgh club nor to the National League, and in all probability would now be spitballing in the American loop. Moriarty, a former Detroit third baseman and manager, and now an American League umpire, related while in Pittsburgh on a lecture tour recently how the present Cardinal slab ace escaped his clutches back in 1916 when he was all set to grab the pitcher for the purpose of turning him over to the Tigers. Grimes had been purchased by Detroit from Ottumwa in June of 1913 for $400, but without giving him a trial the Tiger management shipped him to Chattanooga in part payment for Pitcher Harry Coveleskie, the southpaw Giant killer, who while pitching for the Phillies in 1908 knocked the New York Nationals out of a pennant by beating them three times in five days. Chattanooga released Grimes to Birmingham the following year, and Birmingham sent him to Richmond.

THEN BURLEIGH FOUND himself. He won 23 games for Richmond in 1914, and upon being recalled by Birmingham turned in 17 victories during 1915 and followed with 20 in 1916 before Pittsburgh bought him in August. It was in 1916 that Moriarty saw signs of coming greatness in Grimes.

"I was manager of the Memphis club in 1916," Moriarty said, "and also was playing third for our team. One afternoon early in the season the Birmingham club came to town. We were on the field when the visiting players arrived at the park, and the first fellow out hopped onto the grounds with all kinds of pepper. I was struck by his powerful physique and asked about him, being informed that he was a 22-year-old pitcher named Burleigh Grimes.

"I SAW QUITE a lot of Grimes that same afternoon. He pitched against my club and held us to two hits. That one performance just about convinced me that here was a pitcher who was on his way. I wanted to get him back for Detroit, but was a bit cautious about making a deal on the strength of a single game.

George Moriarty.

"I finally concluded I would wait until I could see him work once more, but in the meantime I fell a prey to fever and was taken to a hospital for a long siege. When I recovered to such a point that I was allowed to talk baseball Grimes was my first thought, but when I brought up his name I was keenly disappointed to learn that during my illness the Pirates had stepped in and landed him.

IN CONTRAST TO the refusal of the Pittsburgh club to book any exhibition games with American League teams on the ground that they do not use their regular lineups and that they fail to hustle, with the result that the fans do not get their money's worth, some other clubs appear inclined to make their championship games secondary to these exhibition affairs. Cincinnati, for instance, has booked the Athletics for May 22 and the Yankees for August 10 in Redland. Playing at home on August 10, the Reds will not be able to make the jump to Boston for the championship game scheduled there for the following day, so the latter event will have to be shifted to a new date to make room for the exhibition game with the Macks.

YOU'D THINK THAT a man still good enough to rank as the leading professional player of the country and who had suffered only one twisted muscle in 11 years, was still getting a lot of fun out of playing football.

But Benny Friedman, who is giving it up to go to Yale as a coach, says it's a great relief to get out of it. "I'd rather sit on the bench and watch others play," he said. "I've had enough of professional football." Playing an average of 56 minutes a game is a tough job. If you stay out for even a little while the crowd begins to boo, and so you can't rest a minute.

"YOU CAN'T GO on forever that way. It's my future I'm thinking about, and if football holds a future for me it's not as a player." Friedman's main job at Yale, of course, will be to teach the

Once again, for the second week in a row, Bethany and Westminster draw the tough assignment of opening collegiate basketball hostilities. The Bisons and Titans will snap at one another tonight in New Wilmington, where the Bisons must avenge the defeat suffered on their own floor last week or else crash down into third place in the tri-state standing.

As matters stand now, Pitt is out in front, with the Bisons second, Westminster third and Grove City fourth, something like this:

	W.	L.	Pct.
Pitt	4	0	1.000
Bethany	10	1	.999
Westminster	9	1	.900
Grove City	8	3	.727

The chances tonight are that Westminster will repeat its triumph of last week over the Buffalo Creekians. Bethany failed to give an impressive exhibition on its own floor, and left but little to indicate that the Knightmen will do much better tonight. Bethany is not noted as an especially good road team.

PITT BREAKS EVEN

Things last week went about as they were expected to go, when at least leaves the boys with no kick coming. The Dukes played their usual in and out game, winning twice and losing once. They came back very nicely to beat Geneva, but went boom against Grove City and then recovered sufficiently to edge out West Virginia Wesleyan in an over-time game.

Pitt broke even, losing a funny one to City College, of New York, and winning fairly handily over Penn State. The Tartans found the going in the East very rough, and were beaten out by Army and St. John's and soundly trounced by Temple.

Grove City and Westminster both wound up with a pair of triumphs. The Titans whipped Bethany and Thiel, while the Grovers, on a two-day jaunt, took both the Dukes and Waynesburg into camp.

Geneva managed to break even, the Covenanters having a bad second half against the Dukes, losing by two points, but they came back fine against Allegheny, trimming the Methodists on their own court by a 14-point margin, no small matter.

STATE FIGHT FAILS

Penn State had the Panthers on needles and pins for three-fourths of the game in the Stadium Saturday night, but cracked wide open during the last six or eight minutes and lost their sixth consecutive game to Pitt. Pitt's teamwork was too much for State, along with some snappy play by Willie Arture and Eddie Baker.

The clever Cliff Battles, of Wesleyan, lived up to his reputation, as he played a wow of a game against the Dukes. It took a long one by Brud Stephens with half a minute to go to tie the score, and then the Dukes, taking heart, managed to pull out with a five-point victory in the overtime.

HARRISON RESIGNS

Westminster's joy over its 62-19 lacing of Thiel was somewhat dampened when it became known that Lawrence (Pops) Harrison had resigned. The resignation did not come as a surprise in all circles, and what is more, it will not be very many days before the lowdown on the entire Westminster situation will be made known ... and how it will be made known.

West Point's Cadets treated clubs from this sector to a very unsuccessful week. First the Army defeated the Tartans at the Point, and then invaded Morgantown to take over West Virginia. It looks like Pitt is the only club around here able to take the Soldiers.

All in all the honors of the week went to Grove City and Westminster, both of which won twice without losing.

TITANS MAY GET LAWTHER

It is said today that John Lawther, former coach at Westminster College, would return to the Titan institution next year as basketball coach, succeeding Lawrence Harrison, who resigned Saturday.

Lawther at this time is coaching at the Freeport (L. I.) High School and is a student at Columbia University, taking graduate work. Lawther may also be given the big job that left vacant by Coach Dike Beede, who has resigned.

EXPLANATIONS OF RIPLEY'S CARTOONS OF SATURDAY: DRINKING TEA WITH MILK IS DRINKING LEATHER—Leather is composed of hide fibre, or cirium, which is combined with tannin (tannic acid) in the process of leather-making. The same fibre element is present in milk, while tannin is a component part of tea. A combination of tea and milk taken as a beverage causes us to assimilate a mild form of shoe leather in our system. THE MONUMENT TO A MAN'S LEG—The monument to Benedict Arnold's left leg, in the corner of the old Revolutionary battlefield of Saratoga, is unique in many respects. It has been erected in memory not of a man but of a man's leg. It memorializes, but does not name, and probably is the only monument ever erected to a traitor in his own country. This traitor, who also was a hero of the American Revolution, lost his leg as a result of a bullet wound received at the battle of Saratoga. His gallantry was such that no mention can be made of the battles in which he participated without tribute to him.

TOMORROW: THE DULL GIRL WHO IS VERY BRIGHT.

HOLDOUT STAR DUE HERE TOMORROW

Whether or not Adam Comorosky, Pirate start outfielder, will continue a holdout will be known not later than Wednesday. According to word from Wilkes-Barre, Pa., his home city, he announced today that he has been summoned to Pittsburgh for a conference with President Barney Dreyfuss tomorrow and plans to leave there today. However, it was said at baseball headquarters, the confab could not be held before Wednesday, the day the second Pirate squad departs for Paso Robles, due to the death yesterday of Sam Dreyfuss, vice president and treasurer of the club, who will be buried tomorrow afternoon.

Indications are that an amicable agreement will be reached with little delay and that Adam will be all set to hop off for another good season.

French a Holdout

By CHARLES J. DOYLE,
Staff Correspondent.

PASO ROBLES, Feb. 23.—When the Pirate vanguard reached the Paso Robles camp yesterday, it didn't take long to discern that the team had only one holdout among the pitchers and catchers.

French won 17 and lost 18 games last season.

The Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph announced some time ago that French would be one of the few holdouts. The policy of the club is not to divulge its business with its players.

French now is officially listed as a holdout as the home office interpretation of the term has it that a player is not a holdout until he refuses to show up at camp at the appointed time. French was among those who were supposed to be here yesterday.

Ens has almost 30 players in camp today, but there will be little doing owing to the death of Vice President Sam Dreyfuss.

Only a slight workout will inaugurate the training season today, in place of the customary fanfare and trumpets, while Manager Ens has called off all activities for tomorrow, the day of the funeral in Pittsburgh.

PLAYERS SHOCKED

The Angel of Death striking so unexpectedly in the Pirate family has turned the camp of Buccaneers into a field of deep mourning. Sam Dreyfuss' death was announced to Jewel Ens and the other Pirates yesterday afternoon while the athletes were joyous over the warm sunshine attending their arrival at the spring training camp. The acute sorrow felt by every man in the squad, not to mention the natives, who had come to like the youthful Pirate official through his many visits here, has transformed the camp site into a dull place.

Shortly after he had received word of the death of the younger Dreyfuss, Manager Ens called Secretary Sam Watters over long-distance telephone to learn some of the particulars. Later Ens and others wired their sympathy to the bereaved family.

BURY DREYFUSS TOMORROW

Private funeral services will be held at 2 p. m., tomorrow, for Samuel W. Dreyfuss, 34-year-old vice president and treasurer of the Pittsburgh Baseball Club, who died at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon from pneumonia.

The services will be held in the late home of the young baseball executive, Morewood Gardens, with Rabbi Samuel H. Goldenson, of Rodef Shalom Temple, officiating. Interment will be in West View Cemetery.

ILL THREE WEEKS

Dreyfuss, who is survived by his widow, the former Carolyn Wolf, of Pargould, Ark., and a 2-year-old son, Barney Dreyfuss, II, his father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Barney Dreyfuss, and a sister, Mrs. William Benswanger, had been confined to bed for three weeks, but pneumonia did not develop until a week ago. He was believed to be on the road to recovery when he suffered a turn for the worse shortly before he died.

Deceased was a Princeton graduate, of the class of 1919, and was an ardent football follower as well as a devotee of baseball and a golfer. He was a member of the Westmoreland Country Club, of which his father, president of the Pittsburgh Baseball Club, was vice president until this year, and also was a member of the Concordia Club, Yale-Princeton Club and the Amen Corner. He was rated a keen mind in baseball matters and had made his mark as a speaker on public occasions. He was elected treasurer of the Pirates in 1921 and vice president in 1929.

BORN IN LOUISVILLE

Samuel Dreyfuss was born in Louisville, Ky., November 3, 1896, and came to Pittsburgh with the parents when the father [illegible]

SYRACUSE, Feb. 23.—The Yellow Jackets, of Pittsburgh, were held to a scoreless tie in an overtime game with the Syracuse Stars here last night, the visitors moving into undisputed possession of third place in the International Hockey League as a result. In being tied, the Pittsburghers kept their nine-game record of games unmarred.

The one point gained from last night's deadlock enabled the Yellow Jackets to pass Cleveland and London, and put them in better position to make the grade for the title post-season series.

Bothe teams missed scoring opportunities in the opening canto. For the Stars the elongated Pelangio, ably assisted and abetted by Holmes and Markle, bore in several times without avail. Goalie Cox rose to the heights with spectacular saves that required some extremely fast footwork. Rodden, Grigg and McCurry were most effective for the Jackets early, but could not score.

The Yellow Jackets lost a chance to break the ice at the start of the last period. Fields carried the puck to the mouth of the enemy cage where he planted the rubber against Goalie Ironstone's pads to spoil what looked like a sure goal.

WINDSOR NEXT JACKET FOE

In meeting the Stars at Syracuse last night, the Yellow Jacket icemen disposed of the only "away" game on their International League hockey card for this week. The local icemen will be hosts to the Windsor Bulldogs at Duquesne Garden Thursday in a game that may have an important bearing on the final disposal of runner-up honors, and on Saturday they will meet the London Tecumsehs here.

Only five more games remain on the Jackets' home program, and the Thursday and Saturday frays will mark the final Pittsburgh appearance of the Windsor and London aggregations.

The Schooley icemen, realizing that they are likely to encounter much trouble in enemy strongholds, hope to make a victory

Decision in Landis Suit Is Delayed

CHICAGO, Feb. 23.—(AP.)—Kenesaw Mountain Landis, commissioner of baseball, probably will have to wait another month before hearing a decision in a test case that may either affirm his dictatorship over the game or damage his position.

Federal Judge Walter Lindley, before whom the injunction suit of the St. Louis Browns against Commissioner Landis, concerning the disposal of Outfielder Fred Bennett, was heard, has been too busy with other cases, and today said he didn't expect to reach a decision "for about a month."

MORGAN BEATEN IN NATIONAL CUP PLAY, 2-1

Cleveland or Detroit May Be Picked for Schmeling-Stribling Battle

LOCALS MUFF OPPORTUNITY TO TIE SLAVIA

CLEVELAND, Feb. 23.—Though fighting a hard battle, the Morgan (Pa.) F. C. missed one golden opportunity to score and went down to defeat before the attacks of the Slavia F. C., of Cleveland, thereby losing a chance to advance to the Western semi-final of the National Challenge Cup yesterday. Cleveland won, 2 goals to 1.

In the last minute of play, with both teams fighting hard, the Morganites muffed a wonderful scoring chance. Ramsay brought off a fine save from a shot by Mitchell. The ball was deflected to Joe Barfoldi, who, running in, missed the ball completely. Kenny kicked into touch, saving the situation for Cleveland. The final whistle sounded before the ball could be brought into play.

ONLY BIG DRIVE

It was only the determined onslaught on the Morgan goal after 15 minutes of play, when the whole forward line and halves of both teams mingled around the goal, that Bernabei, Morgan goalie, in saving a shot, struck the ball against the uprights, and Jackson, lying in close, headed the ball into the net, off Villani, the Morgan back.

Determined to tie the score, the Morgan forwards sought the tying goal. Ramsay was brought off defense by Mitchell, who gave the ball to Buff Donnelli. The latter had nothing to do. He might have walked it through, but instead, slammed the ball past the upright for a goal kick. This saved the Slavias for the time being.

The second goal came after 40 minutes, when the Slavias, working a combination play with the forwards taking part in the raid, worked the ball to within six yards of the goal, with Wilson scoring. Bernabey had no chance with the shot that beat him.

MORGAN REFRESHED

The interval of rest between halves found the Morgan outfit refreshed, and though the Slavias had the wind behind them, the Morgans gave the Clevelanders a hard battle. Mitchell was almost unstoppable, and after seven minutes of play, ran the ball down the wing, passing to Powell, who reduced the lead by slipping the ball by Ramsay with a low shot.

The lineup:

Slavia—2.		Morgan—1.
Ramsay	G	Bernabei
Kenny	R B	Villani
Novar	L B	Cyle
Thomson	R H	Matthews
G. Caraffi	C H	Mangus

ABIE WITZ BUYS BOXING STRING

Spencer, middleweight, of Washington, Pa.

New contracts with these boxers will be drawn today, transferring them from joint ownership to that of Witz alone.

White gave as his reason for the decision to sell out the fact that he is entertaining another business proposition and will not be able to devote the time necessary to the direction of a string of boxers.

Between Rounds

George Panka, the Homestead heavyweight, is not taking anything for granted in connection with his battle with Umberto Arce, Porto Rican Negro heavyweight, whom he meets in the 10-round feature of the weekly show in the Moose Temple, Friday night. He has added several new sparring partners to his string, including George Pirring, huge amateur heavyweight of his home town.

Arce's feat of handily trimming Patsy Perroni, of Canton, and Frankie Wine in recent battles in Ohio has given the fans a line on his ability and indications are that he may prove an even tougher foe for Panka than Benny Touchstone, with whom Panka originally was matched. Touchstone had to cancel because of influenza.

Marty Gornick, of McKeesport, and Frankie Portland, of Ambridge, have been signed to box the opener at the Moose. Mickey Fedor, of Donora, will box Al Becker, of Sheraden, in the semi-final, and Eddie Hebner and Harry Fine may be rematched for the second bout.

Matchmaker Jules Beck is working on the preliminary card for his next show at Motor Square Garden Tuesday night of next week, to be featured by the sixteenth meeting between Willie Davies, of Charleroi, and Midget Wolgast, the flyweight champion. He already has Ted Ross, of Chicago, and Tiger Joe West, of Monessen, paired for the eight-round semi-final. The McKeesport card for Thursday night, with Jimmy Belmont, of Braddock, and Joe Trippe, of Rochester, N. Y., in the main bout, will be staged as originally arranged for last Thursday night, when it was postponed because of the illness of three of the principals.

Gene Baker and Ike McFowler, Johnstown heavyweight rivals, box the main bout of a show there tonight. An amateur show is scheduled in the Coliseum in Greensburg.

Joey Goodman, Cleveland lightweight who has done some of his best boxing in Pittsburgh, now is campaigning in the East. He knocked out Gaby Bagdad in Philadelphia last week, and his manager, Jimmy Dunn, is trying to break him into New York.

The Chicago Stadium is seeking a Young Corbett-King Tut bout for March 30 or April 13.

Twelve amateur bouts will make up the card for the benefit show for the needy of the Thirteenth Ward in the Moose Temple tomorrow night. Boxers and wrestlers of the Pittsburgh district who have won national amateur titles as far back as 1895 will be introduced to the fans as an added feature.

WARNER DENIES CHANGE

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 23.—Glenn S. (Pop) Warner, football coach at Stanford, today denied reports that he is to transfer to the Big Ten or the East. A break with Manager Al Masters regarding the selection of football officials is understood to have prompted the report.

SPORT VIGNETTES

Dr. H. C. Carlson, the University of Pittsburgh's famous basketball coach, has been asked to keep a weather eye on a young former Pittsburgh lad now starring on a New Jersey high school team and anxious to matriculate at Pitt after his graduation in June . . . The lad is Eddie Weaver, a center, who has been a high scorer in his district the past two seasons . . . He is the son of P. E. Weaver, employed in the Philadelphia office of the Pennsylvania Railroad, whither he was transferred from Pittsburgh seven years ago . . . A. E. Schilling, a co-worker of the elder Weaver, was a visitor in town over the week-end and was bubbling over with enthusiasm about the lad's basketball prowess.

Willie Davies, of Charleroi, who meets Midget Wolgast, of Philadelphia, the flyweight champion, in the main bout at Motor Square Garden, Tuesday night of next week, feels confident he will turn in a victory over the phantom-like will o' the wisp this time. . . . They have met on a number of occasions. . . . Several years ago, they clashed in the Garden, with Davies doing all of the effective scoring, but Wolgast dazzling the judges with his speed and drawing down the award. . . . Not long ago, they battled at New Castle, Pa., and there was a division of opinion as to the winner.

Davies bases his hopes on what occurred in their most recent meeting, in Toronto, Canada, probably the best flyweight town on this continent. . . . According to Davies, Wolgast got off to a big lead and had the bout sewed up when Willie decided to cut loose with the "works" in the final round, with the result that he battered Wolgast all about the ring. . . . "Profiting from that experience," Willie said yesterday, "I have made up my mind to go after the Midget from the opening bell the next time. I will step on the gas all the way, and, if I don't beat him decisively, I'll have to admit he's a better ringman than I have been led to believe."

When Georgie Schlie, of St. Boniface Lyceum, of the North Side, boxes Charley Crovatta, A. M. A. champion, in the amateur show at the Greensburg Coliseum tonight, he will be making his sixth appearance within a month in the ring. . . . He is a welterweight of considerable promise.

The sympathy of baseball's fandom goes out to Barney and Mrs. Dreyfuss and the widow of young Sam Dreyfuss, vice president and treasurer of the Pirates, who died yesterday following a siege of pneumonia, from which he apparently had been rallying. . . . The younger Dreyfuss did much to add a fresh and youthful spirit and viewpoint to the direction of the club's affairs, and it goes without saying that his untimely demise leaves a feeling of regret that is widespread. . . . The elder Dreyfuss reposed absolute confidence in his son and undoubtedly planned to have him carry on in his place in the years to come. The full extent of the father's loss can be appreciated only by those who knew of the deep bond of friendship and trust that existed between the pair.—HARRY KECK.

JERSEY CITY ALSO BEING CONSIDERED

MIAMI, Feb. 23.—(AP.)—Selection of Cleveland, with Detroit as an alternative, instead of Chicago for the Max Schmeling-Young Stribling heavyweight championship match in June loomed as a strong possibility after a conference between Damon Runyon, representing the New York Milk Fund, and the managers of the principals, Joe Jacobs and Pa Stribling.

The conference followed the arrival of Jacobs and Schmeling, who will appear in an exhibition three-rounder on the card featuring the 10-round joust Tuesday night at the Madison Square Garden Arena here between Mickey Walker, middleweight champion, and Johnny Risko, Cleveland heavyweight.

"We have an attractive offer from Cleveland, where a municipal stadium, seating at least 100,000 spectators, will be available the latter part of June," Runyon declared. "Selection of this city may furnish an ideal solution to the problems that have arisen so far in attempting to arrange the Stribling-Schmeling match either for Chicago or somewhere near New York.

"Detroit also is regarded as a fine location for the match. Then there is the bid of Jersey City, where a new stadium is under course of construction in addition to the dickering with Chicago. However, no definite announcement of the site will be made until 90 days before the fight."

Simpson Injured In 220 Dash in New Zealand

WELLINGTON, N. Z., Feb. 23.—(AP.)—George Simpson, former Ohio State University sprint sensation, was injured in a race here Saturday and may not be able to compete for several days. Simpson injured a muscle in his thigh running in a 220-yard dash. He has cancelled his exhibition at Invercargill, but hopes to be able to compete in the New Zealand championships Friday.

FELDERS PLAY COLLEGIANS TONIGHT

The Jeannette Felders, of the Allegheny County League, will be hosts to the St. Vincent's College basketball squad tonight in a benefit game at Jeannette. The game will be a charity affair, and the entire proceeds will be turned over to the Catholic Daughters of America. The game, according to Manager Wolfe, of the Jeannette club, has stirred up considerable interest, and a large crowd is expected to attend.

Tonight's basketball schedule is a very light one, due to the fact that the County League season has been concluded.

Keeps Hair Neat

Rich-looking, Orderly

IF your hair lacks natural gloss and lustre, or is difficult to keep in place it is very easy to give it that rich, glossy, refined and . . . orderly appearance . . . so essential to well-groomed men.

Just rub a little Glostora through your hair . . . once or twice a week . . . or after shampooing, and your hair will then stay, each day . . . just as you comb it.

Glostora softens the hair and makes it pliable. Then—even stubborn hair—will stay in place of its own accord.

It gives your hair that natural, rich, well-groomed effect, instead of leaving it stiff and artificial looking as pastes do.

Glostora also keeps the scalp soft, and the hair healthy by restoring the natural oils from which the hair derives its health, life, gloss and lustre.

Try it!—See how easy it is to keep your hair combed—any style you like—whether brushed lightly or combed down flat. If you want your hair to lie down particularly smooth and tight, after applying Glostora, simply moisten your hair with water before brushing it.

PERSHING IMPRESSED BY 1ST DIVISION IN ACTION

U. S. Troops Repulsed All German Attacks, Halted Advance on Paris

Surprise Attack Costly

The attack May 27 was made by 30 German divisions and it came as such a surprise that the French did not have time even to destroy important bridges across the Aisne and the Vesle over which their pursuers followed.

By May 31 the enemy had captured Soissons and reached the Marne and Chateau Thierry, a distance of 30 miles, driving the French before him in confusion toward Paris and inflicting upon them a loss of 60,000 prisoners and 650 guns.

I have heard this retirement referred to as a disorderly, strategic retreat, but it was nothing of the kind and the French military authorities never thought so, nor ever made any such claim. The four French and three British divisions on the front of attack were completely overwhelmed.

The entire French reserve became engaged, in all 35 French infantry and six cavalry divisions participating in the battle. In addition, two British divisions which had been sent to that front to rest; two Italian and two American divisions were called into action and suffered heavily.

Before the attack it was the opinion of our Intelligence Section that the next blow would logically fall exactly upon that part of the line, and that opinion was expressed to the French by my Chief of Intelligence, Brig. Gen. Nolan.

Gen. Nolan.

Yet on the day previous to the attack the French Army Headquarters on that front asserted that everything was quiet and that they did not expect an offensive there. This was indeed a compliment to the enemy as showing the extreme secrecy with which his concentration was made, a precaution which we ourselves rather successfully followed later in preparing for both our major offensives.

Stop Enemy at Marne

The alarming situation had caused Gen. Petain to call me on the 30th to American troops to be sent to the region of Chateau Thierry. The 3d Division (Dickman then in training near Chaumont being the only division within reach besides the 2d, was ordered to move north immediately. Dickman started his motorized machine gun battalion over the road on the afternoon of May 30. The infantry and engineers entrained the same night and the division's supply trains marched overland.

The first element to reach Chateau Thierry was the machine gun battalion, which arrived the afternoon of May 31 and immediately went into action against the enemy who then held the half of the town north of the Marne.

By daylight on June 1 all available guns had been provided with cover and were in their positions, one company with eight guns defending the main wagon bridge, and another with nine guns about 500 yards to the east guarding the approaches to the railroad bridge. From these positions they repulsed all attempts by the Germans to cross the Marne.

Meanwhile, as the infantry of the division came up on June 1 its battalions were put into line to re-enforce the French from Chateau Thierry, east to Dormans. The conduct of the machine gun battalion in this operation was highly praised by Gen. Petain in a citation issued later.

The 2d Division (Bundy) May 30 was near Chaumont-en-Vexin and was preparing to move northward the next day for concentration near Beauvais to relieve the 1st Division at Cantigny. But its orders were changed late that night and the division, moving by motor trucks, was rushed toward Meaux, 26 miles northeast of Paris.

Made Splendid Defense

Reaching there, the leading elements were hurried forward in the direction of Chateau Thierry. The roads were crowded with French troops and refugees. There was great confusion among the rapidly retreating French troops, many of them saying to our men that all was lost.

The initial deployment of the 2d Division was made by the 9th Infantry and the 6th Regiment of Marines June 1, across the Paris highway at Lucy-le-Bocage, in front of Montreuil-aux-Lions, supposedly in support of two French divisions, but the French had orders to fall back through the American line.

In the early morning of June 2, the 23rd Infantry, then on the left, was replaced by the French 167th Division and when re-enforced by one battalion of the 5th Marines, the 5th Machine Gun Battalion and some engineers, it was deployed to the right between the 6th Marines and the 9th Infantry to fill a gap in the French line, and by June 5 the entire division became engaged.

Considering that this was its first experience in battle, this division made a splendid defense, repulsed all German attacks, and by its timely arrival effectively stopped the German advance on Paris.

The sudden appearance and dramatic entrance of the 2nd and 3rd Divisions into the shattered and broken fighting lines and their dash and courage in battle produced a favorable effect upon the French poilu. It must have been with a decided feeling of relief that the worn and tired French Army, retreating before vastly superior numbers, caught sight of Americans arriving in trucks at Meaux and marching thence on foot, hats off, hurrying eagerly forward to battle.

Prove Success in Open

And the Germans, who had been filled with propaganda depreciating the American effort and the quality of our training, must have been surprised and doubtless rather disconcerted by meeting strong resistance by Americans on different portions of this active battle front, especially when our troops advanced at once to meet the attack in open combat.

This defeat of the French furnished the second striking confirmation of the wisdom of training troops for open warfare. While the Germans had been practicing for a war of movement and concentrating their most aggressive personnel into shock divisions, preparatory to the spring campaign, the training of the Allies had been still limited generally to trench warfare.

As our units were being trained for open warfare, this alone would have been sufficient reason why we could not allow them to be broken up and scattered among the Allies.

American divisions were arriving behind the British lines in increasing numbers without the artillery and other auxiliary components, but many of the infantry units were not up to strength and much of the personnel only partially trained.

Our Troops Criticized

The late arrivals, like the earlier ones, complained of the vicious practice of the General Staff at home of frequently withdrawing large numbers of trained men and replacing them with recruits.

It was, therefore, of the utmost importance to push their instruction, now fortunately beyond the possibility of such interruption.

Returning from the British front May 30, I stopped at Sarcus to see Gen. Foch, and dined with him and his staff. It would be difficult to imagine a more depressed group. They sat through the meal scarcely speaking a word as they contemplated what was probably the most serious situation of the war.

As we still had troops that were not yet actively occupied, I suggested personally to Foch when we were alone after dinner that an early counter-attack be made against the new salient, offering him the use of these disengaged troops. Most confidentially, he said, that was what he had in mind.

Speaking of the 2d and 3d Divisions, which had already been ordered to support the French, I told him he could count on my doing everything possible in this emergency, and that I was ready to exert the utmost effort to help meet this crisis with all our forces then at hand, which he said of course he had never doubted.

In further conversation he seemed more than ever of the opinion that only infantry and machine gun units should be brought over from the States, and still apparently could not see the advantage of having complete American combat units or the urgency of men to relieve the extraordinary strain on our supply system.

After the success of our troops we were in no mood to listen to self-appointed critics, M. Andre Tardieu called on me upon my return to Paris the next day and undertook to point out that our staff was inefficient and offered criticisms of our organization. As this was something he could not possibly know about, I replied that he had gotten erroneous impression and that our staff was second to none in either ability or efficiency.

Voices Objections

I advised him that we had quite enough of this sort of thing from the French, either military or civilian, and suggested that if his people would cease troubling themselves so much about our affairs and attend more strictly to their own we should all get along much better.

I did not fail to appreciate M. Tardieu's ability and his helpfulness on many occasions, but this constant inclination on the part of a certain element among the French to assume a superiority that did not exist then or at any later period, added to the attempts of some of them to dictate, had reached the limit.

It must in fairness be said that this superior attitude was not assumed by the higher officers of the French army and rarely by civilians, but was mainly noticed among some bureau officials and others who, clothed with brief authority as instructors or otherwise, came in contact with our organizations.

CLUB MANAGERS CONFAB HERE

By VERN SWARTSFAGER

The outcome of a private conference today between representatives of the Professional Golfers' Association, the Greenkeepers' Association of America, and the officers and directors of the Club Managers' Association of America, which is opening its fifth annual convention in the William Penn Hotel, is expected to have a great bearing on the pleasant relations of the three departments represented in country club circles throughout the nation.

PIRIE, MORELEY HERE

If the representatives of these bodies see fit to reach a co-operative agreement it will mean country clubs will benefit by better service and the rift that has been a constant thorn in the side of more than one club will have ceased to be. Whether Alex Pirie, president of the P. G. A., who is here with two other delegates, appointed by Commissioner Gates, and President John Moreley, of the Greenkeepers' Association, and his conferees, who are here for the conference were empowered with authority to act by their own organizations could not be learned this morning, but if they are, by any chance, a material step forward is anticipated.

KEENAGHAN PRESIDENT

The officers and directors who will represent the Clubs Managers' Association include John L. Keenaghan, president; Fred H. Crawford, Thomas P. Jones, Fred M. Roach, H. H. Mehlman and Karl A. Lott, vice presidents; William Norcross, treasurer, Henry R. Dutton, secretary, and Frank H. Murray, James F. Bohen, H. J. Foerster, George W. Enger, John A. Rogers, Col. C. G. Holden and William F. Homiller, directors. Crawford, formerly was manager at the Keystone Athletic Club here.

The convention officially opens tonight with an informal reception and supper dance at 8 o'clock in Pirate Hall, with the main business of the convention slated for tomorrow.

MAYOR TO SPEAK

Mayor Charles S. Kline, Clarence (Buddy) Overend, president of the Pittsburgh Field Club for the last two years, and graduate manager of athletics at Carnegie Tech; National President Keenaghan, President Thomas F. Carey, Sr., of the local chapter, Henry R. Dutton, of the Boston Athletic Club, and Frank Wilbur Main, are scheduled to make addresses.

Right Rev. Alexander Mann, bishop of the Episcopal Protestant Episcopal diocese, will give the invocation at 10:45 tomorrow morning.

PENSACOLA, Fla., Feb. 23 (AP.)—For the second successive year, Johnny Farrell, St. Augustine, Fla., professional came from behind here to post a 72-hole score of 286 yesterday and win first money in the $3,000 Pensacola open golf tournament.

The victory brought Farrell the $800 winner's share of the money spoils. Lew Walcott, Chicago veteran, forged into fourth place with 290. Al Espinosa, Chicago, took a high 75 to tie with Wiffy Cox, of Brooklyn, for fifth place.

Reliance Again to Sponsor Baseball Club

By TOM BIRKS.

Manager George Miller, of the Reliance Life baseball team, champion last season of the Commercial and Industrial League, announced today that the Insurance boys would be back on the diamond this season as members of the West Penn and Commercial and Industrial League.

The return of the Insurance boys into local sandlot baseball is the best break the game received so far this season. Miller stated that H. G. Scott, vice president of the Reliance Life Company, who loves baseball, had called him into conference and did not want to break up the organization which had nailed the C. & I. title to the Reliance mast. Reliance will be back fighting the Homestead Aces for the West Penn title, and this goes for the Duquesne Traders and Turtle Creek.

HURLERS INTACT

President Dick Mackey of the C. & I. was elated, and so was Bill Strulfire of Reick-McJunkin's, when informed that Reliance would return to the loop. With Gormley, Spencer and Hurley intact for a pitching staff, Reliance is going to play a big part in sandlot baseball in the Pittsburgh district this season.

The Steel City Baseball League will hold its first get-together this evening at 813 Liberty avenue, and 12 of the best light first-class clubs of the district will be on the roster. Last season the Doelfels of Hazelwood copped the honors in the Eastern section of the loop, but only after a desperate race with the East Liberty Crimsons. The East End Cardinals are coming back, but the Hale Club, of Turtle Creek, will not return to the sandlots.

The St. Elizabeth and Star Circle, of Bloomfield, teams will be fighting for honors in the Western section. The Demor Club, which copped the title mainly through the fine twirling of Discola, again is expected to be in the loop. The Observatory Civics with Meeder, one of the best-known managers in charge, expects to be doing its stuff at Pleasant Valley.

C. & I. TO MEET

I. K. S., with Sam Spokane leading the club, Hill Top Triangles, and Clover Club will be back. Honus has invited every light first club in the district to sit in at the gathering called for 8 p. m. tonight.

President Dick Mackey has announced the Commercial and Industrial League will have its first meeting tomorrow night. Reliance Life, Reick-McJunkins, Joseph Hornes, Dravo Contracting, Gimbels, Baltimore and Ohio and other leading teams in this class are expected to attend the gathering at 7:30 at Wagners.

Wednesday evening at the Hotel Main, Monongahela City, the Wagner Monongahela League will convene with Secretary Neccel in charge. He wants the following clubs to be present: Courtney, Riverview, New Eagles, Yankees, Nunola, Gallatin, Elizabeth, Finleyville, Donora, and Monessen, or any other club in that district to be on hand. The meeting is called for 8 p. m.

On Thursday evening the Duquesne League will have its get-together at Manager M. V. Balough's. On Friday the Panhandle League will meet at Jugo Hall, in Heidelberg.

Building Up Big Fights

By IKE DORGAN,
The Man Behind Tex Rickard's Fistic Ballyhoos.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

Tex Rickard learned the New York Evening Journal had planned to take film and action photographs of the Willard and Dempsey bout and carry them to New York by airplane in a flight considered long and hazardous at that time.

Tex Rickard.

Tex got all steamed up over the project. Buck Weaver, a commercial flier, had leased a big landing field within a stone's throw of the arena. He was to carry pictures to Chicago and Cleveland. It was an innovation in newspaper work. The Evening Journal hired a crack flier and a swift Spad combat plane to transport any pictures their staff might secure.

The Journal made arrangements with Weaver for the use of the field for housing the plane and the takeoff on the day of the fight.

Hype Igoe, then working on the New York World, learned of the Journal's plan to beat New York with views of the fray. He wasn't long in tipping off his paper about the Hearst plot. Immediately the wires began to sizzle with communications between Hype and Charles Lincoln, his managing editor.

Could he secure a landing field? The World was sending out an Italian plane, one of the fastest in the world, with Lieut. Smith, of the United States Army Flight Corps, to handle the job. It was costing the World $10,000 and there must be no slipups.

Weaver agreed to take $300 for landing and hopoff privileges. He drew a map such as was used by aviators in those days, with the proper landing spot marked by a giant cross.

Trees were indicated, as were marshes, telegraph wires and ditches, all of which hampered safe landing at this field.

Weaver and Igoe had the field all ready for Lieut. Smith and the costly plane, the cross being made of great stretches of white cheese cloth. They were waiting on the field when a telegram notified them that Smith was sending the plane by freight. It arrived two or three days later and was immediately assembled, standing close to the spunky little Journal Spad.

Rickard took in all of this with a chuckle. Big-time papers were handling his show in big-time fashion, and old Tex was so elated over it that he tried to goad other newspapermen to urge their publications to fall in line. There were a dozen planes on the field ready for flights on the day of the fight before Tex got through with his ribbing.

Igoe decided that the World would have to beat the Journal on the streets with those pictures. If Dempsey only would live up to Igoe's prediction that he'd knock out Willard in four rounds they'd be sensational.

A KIDNAPING PLOT

Hype got himself a plot idea. He hunted up Wild John O'Reilly, an old Broadway friend, a fellow who would jump off the Woolworth Building into a bottle of ink for Hype. Igoe came to the point quickly. That Journal plane must not leave the field at all, he told O'Reilly. Hype and the cockpit sound asleep. He had been there all night! He was O'Reilly snooped around the Spad and "wondered," with Weaver listening attentively, if a gadget couldn't be removed, making it impossible for the Spad to get away. Weaver wouldn't go for that. As master of the field, he was honor-bound to protect every plane under his care.

Then Igoe suggested a kidnaping plot to O'Reilly. They'd wait for the Journal's flier at his rooms in Toledo and force him into a cab and take him to Wild John's room, where O'Reilly was to keep him covered with a gun until after the fight was over and the World plane was well on its way to New York.

If they could keep the pilot away from that Spad, there wouldn't be a flier around who would dare handle the controls on such a dangerous flight. That's why Igoe wanted to keep him prisoner until the World plane had scooted for home with a pictorial scoop. Igoe, without consulting his paper about it, had promised O'Reilly $500 for the job. It was a soft touch for John, who would walk into a lion's cage to begin light housekeeping without batting an eye.

So Igoe and O'Reilly took up their vigil the night before the battle. They had located the flier's boarding house and waited and waited and waited—all night long, but no bird man. What had become of him? The landlady said that he had been in every night up to then. When dawn came, O'Reilly and Hype wandered out to the flying field. Everything was hustle and bustle. Fliers and mechanics were turning up, some trying out their machines as a preliminary gesture to getting away clean.

The two would-be kidnapers walked over to the Spad. Several mechanics were quietly testing struts, oiling here and there. Where was that damned pilot? Oh, there he was, cuddled up in playing out a hunch that someone might try to monkey with his airboat, so he had kept a silent vigil all through the night.

Too late. Kidnaping wouldn't go now, with a half hundred men around the field, so O'Reilly just cursed his Irish luck. He could have used th. t $500—if Igoe ever had been able to collect it for him. A "beat" on the pictures would have meant more than that amount, for Lincoln was a Death Valley Scotty when it came to giving it away for services rendered.

CRASH SPOILS PLANS

Lieut. Smith had assured Igoe and the World that if he got his films and plates as quickly as the Journal was likely to get them, he would beat the Spad into New York. The World was prepared to put an "extra" edition on the streets with the reproductions of the pictures.

The Italian plane could do 157 miles an hour, some flying in those days.

"I'll show you some speed," Smith told Igoe, as he hopped into his seat in the plane. "I'll just loosen her up for this afternoon's dash."

Up he went and soon was roaring in great circles over the arena and the field. The Spad crew knew they were in for a race. After being aloft for nearly an hour Smith came down, zooming over the arena as a final salute, and then he came for the field, flying low and with the speed of a bullet. As he crossed the road on the edge of the field, he headed directly for a maze of telephone wires that he had crossed a dozen times before. BANG! He hit them head-on and the plane wobbled frightfully and continued on until it hit the ground, burying its nose deep into the soil. Smith took a fearful header against the front of the cockpit and came up with an egg plant for a forehead. The machine was wrecked beyond all hope of repair. The World's first picture flight had come to a sad end. Wild John O'Reilly looked at Hype, and Hype looked at Wild John.

The World was notified. A few hours later, Igoe sat at the ringside. Dempsey had just floored Willard seven times in the first round, just missing a one-round knockout because the unheard bell had ended the round.

Igoe heard an airplane roaring over his head. He looked up. It was the saucy little gray Spad, on its way to New York with the Journal pictures. Just as it flew over, Igoe's operator handed him this message:

"Learn there is an airport across the river. Can you go there and hire a plane? Lincoln.

Igoe sent back this reply:

The Spad's pilot crashed somewhere in Pennsylvania, picked himself out of the wreck, hired an automobile and drove 20 miles to catch a train to New York. The birdman, who had escaped those two beetle-browed kidnapers, scooped the town with the action pictures of Dempsey being crowned king of the Queensbury realm!

Long's Sport Comment

Elis forward passing, at which he is the country's most skilled artist. It was generally the receiver's fault when a Friedman pass was incomplete, and in 11 years not one of his flings was intercepted and run back for a touchdown.

"I THROW A pass much like a baseball pitcher tosses the ball," Benny explains, "that is, with that overhand pitching motion. You can't rifle the passes, for the odds are 10 to 1 against the receiver's knowing when the ball is going to come. It must be more or less lobbed, so that it falls slowly and is hung on a hook, as we say. Much, of course, depends on the receiver, and he must get at least a step or two ahead of his man on the way out into the secondary zone. It's a fatal mistake to throw the pass behind your man, as many do, or out on the flanks, where interception means a certain touchdown."

Wall Street Starts Throwing Hats Into the Air.

By B. C. FORBES

IF CHEERFULNESS is not spreading throughout the country, don't blame Wall Street. While industry and business and agriculture and railroads have been finding it extremely hard to discern real symptoms of recovery, Wall Street has begun joyfully throwing its hat in the air.

Mr. Forbes

"What does it mean?"

SOME WHO painfully recall the stock market's false start last spring now doubt the genuineness, the solidity, the stability of this latest upswing. They claim that industry, business, employment, agricultural prices, corporation profits are at an even lower ebb than they were a year ago when the short lived bull movement was launched. They ask:

"Why should a bull movement have any better outcome this spring, under these circumstances?"

THE MAJORITY opinion, however, is that substantially sounder foundations have been laid during the last 12 months for betterment in stock market quotations.

Since then, it is pointed out, very drastic economies have been put into force by most business concerns. Inventories have been worked off. In many lines production has not kept pace with consumption. Because of postponed buying, extensive potential demand has been created, a demand which cannot much longer fail to make itself felt.

Money rates in America's chief financial center are only one-half to one-third of what they were a year ago. Both call and time money were quoted at 4½ to 5 per cent, whereas the call rate has consistently remained lately at 1½ per cent, and time funds are available for short periods at 1½ per cent and for longer periods at 2 per cent.

Brokers' loans, reported by the Federal Reserve Bank, now stand at $1,722,000,000 contrasted with $3,491,000,000 12 months ago, a decrease of 51 per cent. The ratio of brokers' loans to the total market value of securities, listed on the New York Stock Exchange, has lately been at the lowest recorded since this compilation was inaugurated.

That, briefly, gives both sides.

IN THE HIGHEST financial circles, even where hopefulness began to supplant apprehension two months ago, the most common advice in reference to the stock market is "go slow." Conservative financiers distrust spectacular spasms of bullishness, especially when the most sensational advances are scored by highly speculative stocks—"specialties," as Wall Street calls them. They are not yet convinced that public buying of impressive proportions has set in, although they admit there has been some revival of interest.

Their main reason for urging caution is that enough progress has not been made in enough directions to prove that general recovery is in progress. Coincidentally, encouragement is afforded by recent events in the steel industry, the motor industry, the copper industry and in a few other fields. But quickened activity has not yet become general, the commodity price level continues to sag, employment has made no substantial headway, foreign trade continues to shrink, railway traffic is not rising, consumption of electric power is slightly off, bank clearings show no expansion.

Until the business barometer points more conclusively to a rise in prosperity, prudence counsels conservatism, it is argued.

THE MORE hopeful attitude which has come strongly into vogue was well expressed to me by John Moody, the noted authority on investments:

"The stock market now is foreshadowing a better and improving situation. This may not get under way until late spring. I think, however, things will be distinctly better by May—not back to normal or running rapidly ahead, but more stabilized. I think the improvement will then continue throughout the year.

"Restoration of confidence is taking place and there is justification for it both at home and in Europe. The general level of stock prices is still very low, affording a wide margin before it gets into a dangerous zone.

"High-grade bonds have already risen quite a bit. Although the bonus is holding the bond market back a little, easy money is calculated to force high-grade bonds higher. Lower grade bonds act like stocks, responding to business conditions and earnings. As business becomes better, junior issues will show further recovery.

"Notwithstanding what happened in 1929 and since, the country still is stock minded. Small investors are still buying stocks, including fixed trust shares, and doubtless will continue to pick up stocks at low prices."

PERSONALLY, while I still regard most stocks as unduly depressed from the long range point of view, I don't particularly like the highly speculative features of the latest boomlet. Margin buying might prove dangerous.

LETTERS SHOW WASHINGTON AS TRADER

By MERRYLE RUKEYSER.

NEW YORK, Feb. 23.—The largest trust company in the United States in a Washington's Birthday announcement indicates that the father of his country, in the disposition of his own estate, anticipated modern trust company service by naming in his will a large number of executors.

Obviously, the financial machinery for conserving the legacies of heirs is better than in Washington's day, and the intimation of the trust company is that George Washington would be quick to avail himself of such superior service. Doubtless he would.

Mr. Rukeyser

Much as some may regret any direct or indirect attempts to commercialize the revered memory of the first President, such allusions to his everyday life help to humanize Washington, and make him more understandable than the marble statues do.

Washington as a surveyor was not only the first engineer President, but he was distinctly a forerunner of the modern business man. If the Marine Insurance people would run through Washington's letters, they too, would find arguments for their services. For example, in sending an order to Richard Cary, London merchant, Washington prudently counselled: Let them be insured, and, in case of accident, reshipped without delay.

A bull on real estate, Washington revealed this side of his business nature in a letter to William Crawford, written in 1767, in which Washington said: "A tract to please me must be rich, of which no person can be a better judge than yourself, and, if possible, level. Could such a piece of land be found, you would do me a singular favor in falling upon some method of securing it immediately from the attempt of others, as nothing is more certain, than that the lands cannot remain long ungranted, when once it is know, that rights are to be had."

These excerpts emphasize little known new qualities in Washington's varied personality. Of course Washington was significant essentially as a soldier and a statesman, but the record shows that he was also an astute business man.

EXPORT COPPER DEMAND GOOD

NEW YORK, Feb. 23.—The undertone of copper was firm, reflecting good export demand and limited offerings. While electrolytic was quoted at 10.25c delivered in the Connecticut valley, custom smelters and producers were said to be reluctant sellers at this level and some withdrew from the market. The bulk of recent offerings has been absorbed by foreign buying, but domestic consumers have not been active. Demand for finished products has improved somewhat, but volume of orders it still said to be limited.

Tin was firm in anticipation of British governmental approval of the proposed Malayan and Nigerian production and export restriction proposals, official announcement of which was received toward the end of the week. After the sharp advance, however, a slightly easier tone developed and consuming demand remained dull.

Lead advanced on quite active demand and a stronger tone abroad. Zinc was easier under increased selling pressure in nearby positions, with consuming demand moderate.

REFRIGERATORS TO SET RECORD

General indications point to the sale of 1,000,000 electric refrigerators in 1931, a new record for the industry, E. D. Doty, advertising manager of Frigidaire Corporation, told dealers and salesmen of his organization in this section of the country when they gathered here today for a spring business conference. He said:

Mr. Doty

"There are now more than 2,500,000 household units in use, of which at least 1,500,000 have been installed during the past two years. This is a phenomenal expression of popular interest when conditions that prevailed during the past year and a half are taken into consideration."

Mr. Doty came here from Dayton, O., with J. J. Nance, sales promotion manager of this General Motors subsidiary.

J. K. Knighton, eastern regional manager, was scheduled to make the opening address.

Mr. Knighton

Dealers and salesmen were informed that the factories of Frididaire at Dayton, O., are in full operation and that recently orders were sent to 2,000 supply sources throughout the United States for $7,000,000 worth of raw materials needed for immediate manufacturing purposes.

Sales training, advertising, financing, time selling and other retailing subjects were discussed at the meeting. The conference will end tonight with a dinner at which prizes will be awarded to dealers and salesmen of this section who won membership in the corporation's 1930 B. T. U. Club with outstanding sales records, it was announced.

Oil Stability Again Is Menaced in Texas

By GEORGE H. SNYDER.

A NEW THREAT TO THE stability of the oil industry looms in Texas. After four years of struggle to bring production and stocks in line with demand, the producers appeared to be making definite progress. Proration was firmly established in the major fields and recent reports of oil stocks showed that the enormous surplus of petroleum was being reduced.

But the delicate balance between production and consumption may again be disturbed and the industry may have to go through another period of uncertainty if the development of a new field in Texas comes up to the expectations of geologists.

In the new field in Rusk and Gregg counties in Texas, 21 wells have been completed. So far the output has not reached important proportions. Only about 2,000 barrels of oil a day are being taken from the field.

Potentialities Great

THE DANGER TO THE oil industry does not lie in the results already accomplished but in the possibilities of the new field. The potentialities are so great that 110 test wells are in various stages of drilling. Preparations are being made to start the drilling of at least 50 more.

If this drilling activity is moderately successful more intensive development of the field will follow. The machinery of proration has been well organized in Texas and can be readily applied to the field but any new discovery is serious since it threatens to prolong the difficulties of the oil business.

Oil Conditions Peculiar

FOR SEVERAL YEARS the oil industry has presented a peculiar spectacle. Any oil man will admit that the discovery of a new field is the worst thing that could happen. The big companies are doing everything possible to enforce proration agreements and to curtail output.

Yet a strike by a wild cat driller is immediately followed by a rush of these same companies to sink as many wells as possible and to prove as great an acreage of oil as can be found. The same executives who are bemoaning overproduction are today approving the expenditures of thousands of dollars to rush equipment to the new Texas field and to drill every promising acre.

Differs From Other Minerals

THE CONDITIONS AFFECTING oil are different from those surrounding other mineral resources. The fact that we may know where to find enough iron, copper or coal to last for a long period of years is not a disturbing influence. But if we have located enough oil to last more than a few years, it must be brought to the surface immediately and the industry is burdened with an excessive supply.

This strange problem of the oil industry is due to the fact that many producers are usually drawing from the same pool. The first one to get a well down takes oil, not only from his own acreage, but also from his neighbor's. The oil producers would be far better off if the development of each pool were confined to a single company. Then each company would only have to withdraw oil as its refineries required it. But oil drilling is so uncertain that a scheme of this kind would require too much gambling. Each company is afraid that it will be left without a supply of crude at some time in the future if it is dependent on only a few fields. As a result of this, many companies secure small parts of the acreage surrounding likely test wells. If the well are successful they are all protected.

Industry Wasteful

WHILE THIS SYSTEM eliminates the danger of the sudden loss of supply to individual companies, it has made oil production one of the least efficient and most wasteful of industries. It is not only wasteful from the fact that unnecessary drilling is forced but it is also wasteful in natural resources. The competitive rush for oil has caused the premature exhaustion of many fields and the unnecessary loss of much of the gas. It is the gas pressure which forces oil out of a well.

The oil industry is badly in need of a new plan of production but, at the present time, there is little hope for any but minor alterations of the system.

COKE, PIG IRON SHOW GAIN

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23.—January marked the first definite check in the progressive decline that has featured both the coke and pig iron industries since last April. The average daily rate of pig iron production increased 2.9 per cent during the month, the Bureau of Mines reports, while the rate of by-product output shows a gain of 0.5 per cent over December.

Total production of by-product coke for January was 3,092,153 tons, an average of 99,267 tons daily. Although this is a slight improvement over the December average, it is 26.3 per cent less than in the corresponding month of last year when the average was 135,344 tons.

Boys Finally Win Scholastic Honors

WINSTED, Conn.—(INS.)—For the first time in many years boy students in Gilbert High School here have taken scholastic honors. Year after year previously the girls have walked away with first places and have stolen the limelight at commencement time. Boys landed first and second places this year, but the girl students swept all high honors from third place along the line.

Feigns Toothache To Escape Jail

MEXICO, Mo.—(INS.)—It is a natural assumption that even bootleggers get toothaches, but whether the toothache is bona fide or faked is another matter.

120 Husbands Jailed For Non-Support

NEW YORK.—(INS.)—Five Queens magistrates sitting in the Ringwood Magistrate's Court sent 120 husbands to jail during 1930 in non-support cases, according to the report of Probation Officer Charles A. Woods, of the court.

GENERAL TANK EXPANDING FIELD

Reported Dealing to Take Over Packers' Ice Cars; 1930 Earnnigs Show Gain

CHICAGO, Feb. 23.—During 1931 General American Tank Car Corporation will continue the expansion program which has caused its business in the transportation of food products to become more important than its business in the transportation of petroleum products, which was the company's original activity.

In addition, present plans call for entrance this year into certain new lines of railway transportation which are allied to company's present lines, but hitherto have not been developed by it.

Meat packing circles understand that General American has opened negotiations with at least one and possibly more of the large packers with a view to taking over and operating their refrigerator car lines.

QUARTERLY RESULTS

With the aid of good gains in net income in the first and second quarters last year, and despite some falling off in its car manufacturing activities in the final quarter, General American Tank Car again succeeded in showing an increase in 1930 net income over the previous year.

The following table compares net income by quarters in 1930 and 1929:

	1930	1929
First	$1,703,917	$1,972,550
Second	1,949,782	1,994,173
Third	1,814,181	1,728,703
Year	$6,518,181	$6,770,741

NET $8.03 A SHARE

General American has financed its expansion and operated the additional cars acquired in such a way as to avoid dilution of earnings applicable to common stock. While net income was increasing to $6,518,181 in 1930, from $2,003,956 in 1925 or 3.25 times in six years, the number of common shares outstanding increased to 811,647 from 303,570, or not quite 2.7 times. Earnings a share on stock outstanding at the end of the year rose to $8.03 last year from $4.63 in 1925.

Preferred stock was retired early in 1929, and the only securities ahead of common stock are car equipment notes.

FRANKLIN GORED IN BULL FIGHT

NUEVO LAREDO, Mex., Feb. 23.—(AP.)—Sidney Franklin, of Brooklyn, N. Y., the only known American matador, was gored through the right leg and painfully injured by the fourth bull to appear in an exhibition here yesterday. The animal later was killed by Marcial Lalanda, internationally famous Spanish bull fighter.

Early in his encounter with the fourth animal, Franklin slipped on soft sand and was at the mercy of the fierce, charging black bull for several minutes, before picadores finally distracted the enranged animal's attention.

Later, the American fainted, and was carried from the arena. Lalanda finished the bull, but before the next fight was concluded, Franklin returned to the ring, receiving an ovation. He killed the sixth bull, after some difficulties, and Mexican admirers proclaimed him "very brave" and "bold."

ROBBER VICTIM SHOT IN CHASE

William McClintock, 35, of 7924 Susquehanna street, a night garage attendant, lay in a critical condition in Pittsburgh Hospital today with bullet wounds in the abdomen and left thigh, inflicted by a bandit he tried to capture in an automobile pursuit last night.

McClintock, employed in the R. H. Schmitt Company garage, 7827 Hamilton avenue, was alone when the armed robber entered, took 60 cents from him and demanded an automobile. Obtaining the car the gunman sped from the garage. McClintock, according to his story to police, pursued him in his own car and forced the one driven by the robber against a pole at Braddock and Hamilton avenues.

McClintock leaped from his automobile, but was felled with two of six bullets from robber's revolvers. The bandit then drove off.

Druggist in Jail Over Alcohol Dies

SHARON, Pa., Feb. 23.—(AP.)—Harry West, Greenville druggist, died yesterday in the Mercer County jail, where he was serving a three-month sentence for violation of the Federal prohibition laws.

West was imprisoned three months ago after Federal agents discovered he had in his store more alcohol than was allowed. He contracted grip and the influenza. Sheriff Dan Callahan said West refused to be taken to a hospital and was treated in the prison infirmary.

War Comrades Go West on Same Day

KANSAS CITY.—(INS.)—A friendship between Pvt. George N. Nichols, of the 50th Illinois Infantry Volunteers, and Capt. Theodore Griffin, of the same outfit, cemented on a Civil War battlefield and nurtured throughout the ensuing years, was brought to a close here with the death on the same day of the two comrades.

Pvt. Nichols was 86, and had been a salesman at the stockyards here since 1885. Capt. Griffin, who was 88, was a physician.

MISSING PRIEST IN HOSPITAL

DETROIT, Feb. 23.—(INS.)—Grave fears expressed by fellow churchmen over the safety of the Rev. Dom Francis Clougherty, chancellor of the Catholic University in Pekin, China, were allayed here today when it was learned that he is in a Columbus, O., hospital recovering from a severe attack of influenza.

Father Clougherty vanished from sight of Detroit superiors January 18, when he left Toledo, O., with Youngstown, O., as his announced destination. When he failed to appear in the latter city or to communicate with superiors here, alarm was expressed over his whereabouts, as it was known he was ill when he left this city.

Pittsburgh relatives of Dom Francis were loath to discuss the circumstances surrounding the reported disappearance. His brother, the Rev. Father Joseph A. Clougherty, assistant pastor of St. Kieran's Church, Lawrenceville, was reported in Cleveland in connection with the case. Dom Francis was born in Braddock and at the time of his appointment by Pope Pius XI to the China post last September, was attached to St. Vincent's archabbey at Beatty, where he continued to make his official headquarters.

DANCERS RIOT, 1 DEAD, 80 HELD

NEW YORK, Feb. 23.—(AP.)—To the strains of "Home Sweet Home," rioting broke out among 800 dancers in a Brooklyn hall this morning, resulting in the death of a man, the probable fatal wounding of another and injuries to scores.

Discontent over the award of prizes for the best dancers was blamed.

A dozen or more shots were fired. The lights were turned out. Men and girls fought to get out. Tables and chairs were smashed. Windows were broken, clothes torn and faces scratched.

Claudy Post Goes To Dr. Stevenson

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 23.—(AP.)—Election of the Rev. Dr. Joseph A. Stevenson, of San Jose, Cal., as general director of the department of moral welfare of the Presbyterian Board of Christian Education, was announced at the headquarters of the board here. Dr. Stevenson, who succeeds the Rev. Dr. J. W. Claudy, Pittsburgh, is to serve until June 1, 1932.

WRIGLEY'S 1930 PROFIT AT RECORD

Report Expected to Show Net Near $6.10 on Common; Hit Peak in Third Period

NEW YORK, Feb. 23.—Although preliminary report of Wm. Wrigley Jr., Company, which includes earnings of the parent company only, for the year ended December 31, 1930, showed a decrease in net to $11,404,092 off $50,834, as compared with 1929, indications are that the consolidated statement, which will be available within the next month, will show earnings of between $12,100,000 and $12,200,000. This would compare with consolidated net of $11,608,708 in 1929 and mark the fourth consecutive year of record earnings.

DIVIDEND COVERED

On the 2,000,000 shares of common stock the above net would be equal to between $6.05 and $6.10 a share compared with $5.80 a share on 1,999,974 shares a year ago. Earnings covered the $4 annual dividend by a wide margin. This issue is the company's sole capital obligation.

Estimate of consolidated earnings of between $12,100,000 and $12,200,000 assumes that net from subsidiaries will run between $700,000 and $800,000. In 1929 subsidiary income amounted to $154,412.

LAST QUARTER OFF

Earnings of the parent unit suffered a sharp decline during the final quarter of last year. Net income for the period was $2,351,046, compared with $2,919,383 in 1929, a decrease of 19.5 per cent. This also was the only quarter in 1930 during which earnings failed to establish a new high record. Peak earnings for any quarter in the company's history were attained in the September, 1930, quarter when net reached $3,395,164. This period usually is the best of the year. The increase last year, however, was largely due to lower raw materials cost and cut in other expenses.

ADVERTISING AIDS

The chewing gum indusy has proved to be virtually depression-proof. The low cost of the product, of course, is the chief reason. Extensive advertising has been another important factor back of increased earnings. Wrigley is one of the pioneers in nationwide advertising, having expended between $60,000,000 and $70,000,000 on this account since 1910. Annual average expenditure is around $4,000,000.

Shoots Estranged Wife, Mother-in-law

SHENANDOAH, Pa., Feb. 23.—(AP.)—Angered because his 25-year-old wife refused to return to him, Michael Pulaski, 45, according to police, shot and wounded her and her mother, Mrs. Margaret Gunoksy, 44, before he was felled by a poker wielded by his brother-in-law, James Gunoksy, 16.

Pulaski, suffering from a fractured skull, and Mrs. Gunoksy, were said by physicians to be in a critical condition.

RUTH ETTING WRITES RADIO COLUMN

The Loudspeaker

By LOUIS REID

NEW YORK, Feb. 23.—King Features Syndicate has begun the release of a series of electrical transcriptions, comprising the new comic features and cartoons which King Features Syndicate represents. The newest departure in entertainment. Made possible by permission of the William Randolph Hearst papers noted the attractions are recorded by the Recording and Broadcasting Service of New York, and will be released throughout the country.

A group of seven New England stations of the Yankee chain, owned and operated by the Shepard Broadcasting Company, were the first to contract for the use of the transcriptions. The first on the list to be broadcast in New England will be the world-famous cartoon "Bringing Up Father," which begins its regular release on this chain in about two weeks.

Other features now appearing in the press as well as in other newspapers throughout the world which have been or are being electrically transcribed for broadcasting include "Tillie the Toiler," "Mutt the Agent," the "Katzenjammer Kids," "Polly and Her Pals," and "Thimble Theater." Among the special writers and cartoonists who will be represented in the series are Bugs Baer, Damon Runyon, Helen Rowland and Beatrice Fairfax.

Each of the transcriptions is of 15 minutes duration and each has a musical background specially provided by Charlotte Kent, leading Broadway composer who has contributed song hits to such productions as "The Little Show" and "Sweet and Low."

Unusual care has been taken in making the records of these popular newspaper features. Prior to the production of "Bringing Up Father," for example, a search lasting several weeks and including a consideration of more than 100 applicants for the part of Jiggs and more than 65 applicants for the role of Maggie was necessary to find players skilled in comedy character acting and whose voices were not only suitable for recording, but were in sufficient contrast as to convey individual appeal. The result is a 15-minute presentation of Jiggs and Maggie and the familiar folk associated with them that is as humorous as it is authentic.

The first recording depicts Jiggs in one of his innumerable attempts to escape the watchful eye of Maggie that he may join his cronies at Dinty Moore's. The episode is faithful throughout to the artist's conception and will increase the popularity of "Bringing Up Father," it is predicted, to an infinitely greater extent than it now possesses in the printed page—and it is the most popular newspaper feature, from the standpoint of circulation, in the world.

Likewise in transcribing "Tillie the Toiler," essentially the same elaborate care was made to impart the note of contrasting vividness and quality. Tillie, Mac, Whippel Mr. Simpkins and the other characters of the cartoon have only to be a reality about them that is definite and diverting.

Ninety per cent of American broadcasting stations, it is estimated, are now using electrical transcriptions. Radio has thus described a complete circle in its history. Broadcasters started programs made of phonograph records and they are now depending largely upon records, greatly improved records.

An even greater improvement in transcriptions is now in process as the General Electric Company and other research organizations have developed a new system of recording sound on film for radio purposes, using the whole width of the film for a sound track. A film is obviously more convenient for radio transcription than a record because it can be edited and assembled more easily.

WE NOW PRESENT

By DARRELL V. MARTIN, Radio Editor.

The college "pledge" who had Ruth Etting autograph an egg for him in the Stanley dressing rooms last Saturday no doubt made his fraternity Others of the society who sent him out to count the windows in the Koppers Building then obtain the valued signature of America's crooning sweetheart probably were a jealous bunch yesterday when the youth returned to the frat house not only with a correct count of the windows and an autographed egg but Ruth Etting's personally signed photograph and a few of her phonograph records to boot.

Ruth Etting

That incident tells more about Ruth Etting than we could tell you in another thousand words. She is a coy, demure little girl—blonde, with entrancing blue eyes, and a speaking voice as soft and sweet as she sings.

At no time during our interview last night did she display any touch of "high hatedness" over her success but chatted rather freely of her childhood days back in Daved City, Neb., and the times she sang in Chicago clubs with Amos 'n Andy (then Sam 'n' Henry) for $10 a day. Can yuh remagine that?

Ruth admits shyly that she has never studied voice. Once she studied piano and that's where she got the musical background for singing "Ten Cents a Dance" like she really meant it.

At our request, Ruth has consented to sing "Over Night" and "Love Is Like That" when she appears in KDKA studios at 11:15 tonight.

As guest writer of "We Now Present" today, this popular radio and stage star has this to say:

"Hello, friends. I have always enjoyed Pittsburgh and feel perfectly at home when I come here.

"It pleases me to learn from Mr. Martin that you love my radio programs so much.

"Radio fascinates me. I believe the illusion effect is its greatest virtue. The fact that listeners cannot see the artists and have the privilege of visualizing characters on the air to their own liking is a great asset to radio art.

"If I operated my own broadcasting station, I would not let visitors in to see the artists because it sometimes destroys an illusion of happiness in the listeners' mind. It is like tearing the mask off Santa Claus.

"No one enjoys thoroughly a motion picture after he visits Hollywood and sees first hand how they are made. The same reaction is true of radio fans after they watch artists in the studio. Even the sound effect of rain, so perfectly portrayed through the loudspeaker, with the use of rice falling on a tin-pan, loses its significance as rain when the listener has once seen the illusion performed in the studio.

"Television? As you have remarked, I was one of the first to take the television test at Round Brook, N. J. I have studied its various angles. Television will be a wonderful thing but its effectiveness will be determined by the broadcasters' art in concealing certain illusions and allowing the listener to use his imagination as we do now. It will never do, for instance, to televise a choo choo train the way they do it today. How absurd to have the Empire Builders blow into the scene with a trap drummer swishing a wire bfush over a rough tin plate or to see that complicated roller skate mechanism in the NBC studios which gives a perfect illusion of the Pittsburgher clipping along at 65 miles per hour.

"Should I say more? Perhaps that is enough. What I have not said I shall sing for your readers tonight at 11:15 on KDKA.

"Best wishes and good luck, everyone!

Ruth Etting

After hearing those 13 dead thuds of the Liberty Bell yesterday, we suggest that they submit it to an audition before putting it on the air again.

"BY THE WAY——"

Charles B. Tramont was stunned recently to see Lowell Thomas wearing a shiny gold badge . . . Lowell is an honorary cop in his home town of Duchess County, New York . . . We have the pleasure and distinction of introducing Cy Hungerford, cartoonist, at the Advertising Club's luncheon tomorrow over imaginary station XIBT . . . Beniamino Gigli, tenor, is the first star in a new CBS series to be heard over WJAS next Monday night at 8:30 . . . The National High School Chorus of 550 voices is on WJZ at 6 o'clock tonight . . . And Otto Gray brings his Cowboy Band to the WJZ network Wednesday night at 8:30.

TODAY'S TID BIT:

Zoel Parenteau says nothing has ever amused him so much as the time an itemized bill was submitted for the KDKA Salute series in New York with the notation:

"Cat's meow . . . $50."

The program went on—without the cat's meow when it was learned an impersonator wanted this fee to play feline for four seconds.

BURIAL TUESDAY FOR PATTERSON

William J. Patterson, president of Heyl & Patterson, Inc., husband of Fay Templeton, former actress, will be buried tomorrow afternoon. He died Saturday in his Schenley Apartments residence.

The marriage of Patterson and Miss Templeton, one of the stars of the stage, was followed by the retirement of Miss Templeton. She appeared on the stage only once or twice since.

She was a friend of the late Lillian Russell, and she was mentioned as a probable witness in the suit of Dorothy Russell Calvit against the estate of Ambassador Alexander P. Moore.

The funeral will be held in the T. B. Moreland funeral home, North Highland avenue, at 3 p. m. tomorrow. He was born in old Allegheny. He was a member of the Engineers Society of Western Pennsylvania, the Duquesne and Union clubs, Pittsburgh Field Club and the Pittsburgh Athletic Association. Besides his widow he leaves his mother; two sisters, Dr. Ellen J. Patterson and Miss Mary F. Patterson, and a brother, John S. Patterson.

HOLDUP STORY JAILS MAN

Ed Finch, 35, a Negro, of 1010 Warlow street, today was being held in Central Police Station on a suspicious person charge after police say, they discredited his story of a holdup.

Finch, employed in the Diamond Street Market, is alleged to have told police that he was robbed and bound with a rope by an armed man in the market yesterday. His story of the alleged robbery was contradicted by the market house watchman who, police declared, saw no one enter or leave the building after Finch.

Girl Drowns Trying To Rescue Pet Dog

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Feb. 23.—(AP.)—Love for their dog cost 12-year-old Mary Margaret Hoffman her life and sent her brother, John, 11, to a hospital in critical condition when both plunged through the thin ice of the Genesee River in attempting to rescue their pet, which had fallen through a water hole while scampering over the surface.

Mary and John rushed upon the ice to seize their pet, playmates said, and plunged into the water 30 feet from shore. Mary drowned but John was rescued. The dog climbed to safety.

Mrs. Dewey's Body To Rest by Admiral's

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23.—(INS.)—The body of Mrs. Mildred McLean Dewey, widow of Admiral George Dewey, Spanish-American War hero, will be placed beside that of her husband in a crypt in Washington Cathedral. Brief services will be held tomorrow morning at the home in which she and the admiral lived by the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, bishop of Washington. Mrs. Dewey, 80, died Saturday of pneumonia.

Bandit Robs Theater As Crowd Watches

NEW YORK, Feb. 23.—(INS.)—Only $200 was obtained by a daring bandit who reached his hand through a cashier's booth of a Broadway movie house, the theater owner said today. The bandit made his coup during a rush hour last night and escaped while a long queue waited at another window to buy tickets.

KEITH RITES SET TOMORROW

HARRISBURG, Pa., Feb. 23.—(AP.)—A lingering illness, from which he had suffered for the last four months, yesterday claimed the life of Dr. John A. H. Keith, 61, superintendent of the Pennsylvania Department of Public Instruction during the administration of former Gov. Pisher.

Dr. Keith died at his home here and arrangements were made for a private funeral service from the home at 4 o'clock Tuesday afternoon. The following day the body will be taken to Indiana, Pa., for interment.

His term as superintendent of public instruction expired last January 24 and since that time he has been connected with the department as consultant in educational matters.

MINISTER ENDS SERVICE HERE

The Rev. Dr. Percival H. Barker, for 10 years pastor of the Point Breeze Presbyterian Church, preached his last sermon in that church yesterday. He leaves for Buffalo, where he will become pastor of the Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church March 1.

As one of his last official acts he decorated Miss Margaret E. Fleming, of 6811 Kelly street, a Sunday school teacher in the church 50 years, with a medal awarded by the Allegheny County Sabbath School Association. During the half century Miss Fleming has not missed a Sunday with her class.

Woman Lord Mayor Of Liverpool Dies

LIVERPOOL, Feb. 23.—(AP.)—Liverpool today mourned Miss Margaret Beavan, first woman to become its lord mayor and known as "little mother" because of her interest in child welfare. She died here yesterday after a brief illness.

She was a forceful public speaker and served successively as justice of the peace, member of the city council and lord mayor of Liverpool. In 1929 she ran for the House of Commons as a conservative, but was beaten by the Labor candidate, Derwent Hall Caine, son of the novelist.

Poison Rum Blamed In Student's Death

FAIRMONT, W. Va., Feb. 23.—(AP.)—William Musgrave, 19, student at Fairmont State Normal School and son of a Fairmont attorney, died at a fraternity house, apparently, county officers said, from the effects of poisoned liquor. Authorities were seeking to learn the source of the liquor.

Musgrave, officers were told, came to the house apparently intoxicated, and was put to bed. Physicians were called when it was seen he was seriously ill, but it was too late to save his life.

Restaurant Check Argument Jails 2

CHICAGO.—(INS.)—"Allow me to pay the check."

"No, Let me do it. It's my treat."

This conversation, repeated back and forth for a quarter of an hour, between James Duggan, 26, and John Powell, 27, aroused the suspicion of Christ Manopolus, restaurant owner.

The officer searched Duggan and Powell and found that neither of them had a cent. They were taken to court and each fined $2 and levied $2 costs.

Mary Agrees to Pretend To Be Invalid's Wife

CHAPTER IX

Feeling suddenly as if she had entered a fascinating fairy tale, with its One-Eye, Two-Eye, Three-Eye, miraculously appearing luncheon tables and all, Mary Lou followed Hilda's becoming maroon uniform into the loveliest bedroom she had ever seen in her life and through that into a great bathroom, painted and decorated in mauves and greens. There was a huge dressing table there with many mirrors and rows of crystal bottles with jade stoppers and squat crystal jars filled with cold creams and cosmetics which looked quite good enough to eat.

Hilda produced heavy linen towels and gayly colored wash cloths, a powder jar and tufts of ribbon-tied cotton and a brand new brush and comb in a little case and after inquiring whether there was anything more she could do, withdrew.

Served Luncheon

Mary Lou washed her hands and face, combed her hair and powdered her pert little nose in a sort of dazed and lazy dream. Even the towels were too good to be true. Her fascinating eyes lingered long on the shining shower with it heavy glass door.

She walked about and looked at the interesting walls, cool green and splashed with lavender in strange and unconventional designs. She had just about decided that it looked like a garden at six when Hilda knocked at the door and announced luncheon. So Mary Lou went obediently out of the beautiful bathroom into the more beautiful bedroom and through to the sitting room, suddenly conscious that she was very hungry indeed.

Hilda had vanished. Peter hovered for a moment to see that the tea was strong enough and everything arranged for her comfort and then he too followed Hilda's example and left Mary Lou to regale upon her tray with extreme pleasure and appetite.

A round of orange-bright melon, a slice of lime, a cup of steaming hot clear chicken broth, lots of brown bread which she loved cut thin the way she liked it, Melba toast as well, fresh buttered, a lamb chop, a baked potato, taken out of its shell and whipped with cream and put back again, and new green peas in milk, tea with lemon and with cream, and a funny little fruit dessert all fluff and sweetness such as girls love.

She ate with her eyes as well as her red mouth. The linen was lovely, the crystal and silver perfect, the luncheon service in tones of brown and yellow like an autumnal scene the prettiest she had ever seen. And she was almost reluctant to ring for Peter at last, as he had asked her to do, and to see him appear and carry the remnants away, while Hilda, deft and silent, set the table back against the wall again.

But Hilda had not been gone very long when Mrs. Lorrimer appeared.

"Did you have enough? Are you all right?" she asked anxiously. "I thought you'd be happier served up here in my special room than anywhere else."

"I was happy," said Mary Lou shyly, "and everything was lovely . . . but I do feel I am imposing."

"No," said Mrs. Lorrimer quickly, "it is we who are imposing on you. I must tell you." She stopped, looked down, and picked up the picture of her son. Mary Lou flushed. . . .

Says He's Married

"That's Travers," said his mother gravely, as he used to be. You have seen him now. As I told you he is organically sound. He has simply lost all interest in life since his return from the war. He enlisted in 1915 at 17 and stayed on in the Royal Flying Corps service all the way through. The summer before the Armistice he went to London on leave and met a girl there. Her name was Delight Harford and she was an American girl living in London. He fell insanely in love with her . . . and apparently, she with him. And before he returned to the front he married her—or so he says."

"Or so he says?" repeated Mary Lou, amazed.

"Yes. We have been unable to find any record of the marriage or any trace of the girl, despite the work of our agents in London. You see, shortly after his return to France, Travers was shot down and taken prisoner. After the Armistice, he returned home. He had not had an actual lapse of memory—or rather . . . it is difficult to explain. He did have for a time, for he remembered very little while he was first in the German hospital and later in the prison camp. His memory seemed to stop that last day of his leave. His wedding day. He was married, he told us, in the afternoon and left directly after the ceremony to go back to the front. Since his return home he has recalled his journey to the front, his few days of service, his last flight and his experiences as a prisoner. But he has—a fixed idea. The idea concerns itself with the girl we have not been able to trace. Nothing else interests him, nothing touches him. I have moved heaven and earth to find her for him. But all to no avail."

A Strange Request

"And you don't think they were married?" asked Mary Lou, "although he says so?"

Mrs. Lorrimer made a weary little gesture.

"What am I to think?" she asked, almost hopelessly. "He says so—but there are no records."

"How dreadful for him and for you!" said Mary Lou, preoccupied with the thought of this unknown girl. Lorrimer's beloved, perhaps his wife, perhaps thinking herself his widow.

"Mary Lou," said Mrs. Lorrimer without ceremony . . . "he thinks you are that girl. He doesn't realize . . . anything . . . so he thinks you are she. He doesn't seem to understand the lapse of time, the age she would be now . . . she must have been your age or a little younger when he knew her. He thinks she has come back to him. To stay. It is, I suppose, an extraordinary resemblance. Strong enough for him at all events, with his poor mind and heart so lacerated by his experiences, by her loss. When . . . when he came to himself again I had a fearful time calming him, he wanted her—you—at once. He was beside himself with fear lest you had gone. He demanded to see you to reassure himself. Peter and I got him to his room. Dr. Mathews, who has been our physician and close friend for many years, came immediately and, the situation explained, gave him a sleeping draught and then stayed here with me to discuss this amazing position in which we find ourselves. And finally he has persuaded me that . . ." she stopped and to Mary Lou's infinite pity and discomfort, the bright tears clouded the brown eyes and fell heavily on their clasped hands. . . . "I—I don't know how to ask it of you . . ." she said, after a moment . . . "but . . . everything depends on it, my boy's health, his very life, his future. Would you stay . . . Mary Lou . . .? could you stay . . . ? could you possibly pretend . . . ?"

"Pretend?" asked Mary Lou, low.

"That you are the other girl . . . the real Delight?" implored Mrs. Lorrimer.

"You have lived abroad," Mrs. Lorrimer reminded her hastily, "you . . ." she tried to smile . . . "you also fit the requirements of the companion for whom we advertised. You are healthy, normal, active, cultured . . ."

"He married her, so he says."

Offered Much Money

"But—" asked Mary Lou—"pretend to be someone else . . .? some one he cared for . . .? his wife?" she asked, and flushed deeply.

"I have spoken to Dr. Mathews about that phase of it," she admitted, "and he has a plan. Later, if you consent, we will talk to him about it before you see Travers again . . . I—I'd try and make you happy here," she begged, sweetly, pleadingly, "and I'd compensate you—"

Mary Lou said, quickly, very uncomfortably:

"Please don't talk about . . ."

"But we must." Mrs. Lorrimer smiled at the girl, feeling her heart still with hope. "You came, after all, for a position. I will pay you," she said, "three hundred a month, and give you your clothes and your home. No one, of course, will be aware of our arrangement but ourselves and the doctor and, of course, the few relatives I have. The servants have all been with me a long time and can be trusted. Since Travers'—illness—I have gone out very little. I see only my closest friends. To them you will be—a visitor."

"But," said Mary Lou breathlessly, "three hundred a month is far too much—"

"You'll never make a business woman," commented Mrs. Lorrimer, "and it isn't half enough. No sum is enough for what I'm asking of you."

Consents to Plan

"I—Oh," cried Mary Lou, "how can I go through with it, playing a part, living a deception . . . ? what will he think when he knows . . . he'll hate us all!"

"I know," said Mrs. Lorrimer, low, "I thought of that, but we have to risk it. If we can give him back his health and his interest in life and clear up the confusion in his mind—perhaps—perhaps he'll realize and not—not condemn us. Oh, I know the whole situation must seem mad to you and I have no right to ask it of you. You're very young," she said, "and I am a complete stranger to you—but I am so desperate. You don't know what these last 10 years have been," she added slowly.

After all, it was like a fairy tale. This gorgeous house, this woman whom she had so liked and trusted on first sight, the beautiful surroundings . . . and the game of make-believe she would be called on to play, a game she had so often played by herself. And three hundred dollars a month! Why, she'd be rich, she could save, she could do things for other people . . . !

She looked at Mrs. Lorrimer with shining eyes.

"Oh," she said, "it's all quite mad, and impossible but—I'll do it," promised Mary Lou, "I'll try . . . I'll do my best, Mrs. Lorrimer . . . if you really think it best for . . ." she hesitated . . . "him," she ended firmly.

DAILY TRUE STORY— Extra Money

Ralph Billings entered the darkened room and walked to the bed, where, by the faint light from the edge of the shabby shade, he could see his wife's white face upon the pillow, a wee red form lying by her side.

The woman opened her eyes and smiled faintly up at him. She started to speak, but as though finding the exertion too great, again closed her eyes, while the smile lingered. Billings drew closer about her shoulders the worn and faded blanket, patched so often by her busy hands that it no longer bore resemblance to its former self.

The man looked down into the folds of the blanket at this fourth arrival to his little brood. It was not unwelcome, but it meant more close living, more sacrifice—more poverty. Involuntarily, his hand felt of the bank book in his pocket. He crushed it between his cold fingers. It was merely a record of a past savings account, he reflected, with the ink of the last withdrawal still fresh within its covers. He wondered how his family would pass through the winter ahead—with coal higher and the children needing warm coats and shoes.

Finds Photograph

With a sigh, Billings continued his work of enlarging a bedroom closet in Mr. Walton's castle-like home. Suddenly, as he grasped a broad shelf and tore it loose with his strong muscular arms, a piece of cardboard fluttered to the floor. He stopped and picked it up.

It was the photograph of a young man, apparently in his early twenties. There was nothing particularly attractive about the face, yet throughout the morning Billings found the photograph demanding his attention. It seemed to remind him of someone he had known. Something in his past was strongly associated with this picture. In a corner of the mounting he noticed in gilt print:

Carl Lantz Studios,
Fenton, Mass.

Holding the photograph well to the light, he looked long and thoughtfully at the faint lettering. Fenton must be a small town, he surmised, and yet that name and the face on the photo seemed in some unknown way to have played a part in his life. A strange feeling possessed him that the man in the photograph was in some way connected with money. Money! How he needed money!

At the first blast of the noon whistles Billings dropped his tools, and with a feeling of excitement quite in contrast to his mood of the early morning, started for home. Somewhere, perhaps in his shed among the years' accumulation of rubbish, was an old newspaper print of the photograph in his pocket.

Mystery Cleared

Soon amid the dust of years he was lifting the lid of an old trunk upon its rusty hinges. It contained odds and ends that had been brought from his mother's home, and that his bride had thought worth keeping—grade cards from school days; a curl from his first haircut; his scrapbook of baseball scores, and another book whose front page bore, in a lopsided sort of print, MY DETECTIVE BOOK. It was yellow and musty, but it held the records of his boyhood dreams; the beginning of his career as a great detective—and the end.

The book contained clippings about mail robberies, bank burglaries, swindlings and murders. Here and there a clipping was marked across the face of it, "BEEN CAUGHT." The descriptions were of criminals and their crimes, many accompanied by photographs of the law-breakers whom he would ferret out and bring to justice. Page five was turned, and there upon its sheet was pasted a long clipping, accompanied by an excellent print of the photograph that had fallen at his feet that morning in Walton's home.

The newspaper print was of John Wayne. The article told that he was a bank clerk of 22 years, who had disappeared from Fenton, Massachusetts, with bank funds amounting to many thousands of dollars. Billings remembered how he had studied that face when the crime was revealed—it looked so honest for a thief's—and how, as the months passed and the culprit had not been brought to justice, had wished there was no school so that he might begin his career by capturing this man.

The reward amounted to $3,000. What $3,000 would mean to him now—with that new mouth to feed!

Was he now, after 25 years, at the end of a quest that he had never begun? His imagination keen from excitement, it was easy to see in the photograph of John Wayne the countenance of Philip Walton. The latter's gray mustache and hair and the lines about his eyes would make a great difference to the casual observator, but not so to Ralph Billings. There was a sadness, a look of long suffering in the depths of Walton's eyes that were missing in the youthful Wayne's, but they were the same eyes.

But what of Walton — his friend? He remembered the times this man had "created" a job for him to tide the carpenter over when work was scarce. And the many acts of kindness done him by the rich and influential man. He sat down upon the dusty trunk and looked through the grimy window upon his home. A limousine stood before the house and Walton was entering the yard with a basket of fruit in one hand and a large package in the other.

And he would be rich, too, in $3,000 honestly won. Kind providence was placing it as a weapon in his hands that he might slay the wolf of hunger and want. Abruptly he arose and, descending the stairs, was soon walking rapidly through the alleyway toward the telegraph office, his heart beating wildly in his breast.

For five minutes he held a pencil idly in his fingers, uncertain what he would say to the Fenton police. The fire engine went clanging pass, but he hardly heard it, so absorbed was he in his thoughts. At last he wrote:

HAVE FOUND JOHN WAYNE--

Burns Evidence

In a daze, Billings crammed the unfinished telegram into his pocket and rushed into the street. He was conscious of only one thought—his helpless wife and new born babe.

As he drew near his home he saw the fire was under control. A woman ran up to him.

"Your wife's all right, Mr. Billings. Her and the children's over to my house. Mr. Walton got his hands pretty bad burnt, though, carrying your wife out."

"Walton!"

He could say no more. A little group had gathered about where a physician was dressing the burned man's hands. Despite his pain, Walton smiled as Billings approached.

"Don't worry, old man, about your losses. I want you to let me help you get on your feet again. We'll talk it over tomorrow. Fine boy you got!"

The telegram in his pocket was like a thorn piercing through Billings' heart. He tried to speak, but only a choking sound came. Nearby a tiny flame was flickering over a piece of burned blanket.

Slowly he drew the photograph and the crumpled telegram from his pocket, and dropping them upon the flame watched it eagerly devour them, until only the charred ashes were left—to be blown far and wide by the four winds of heaven.

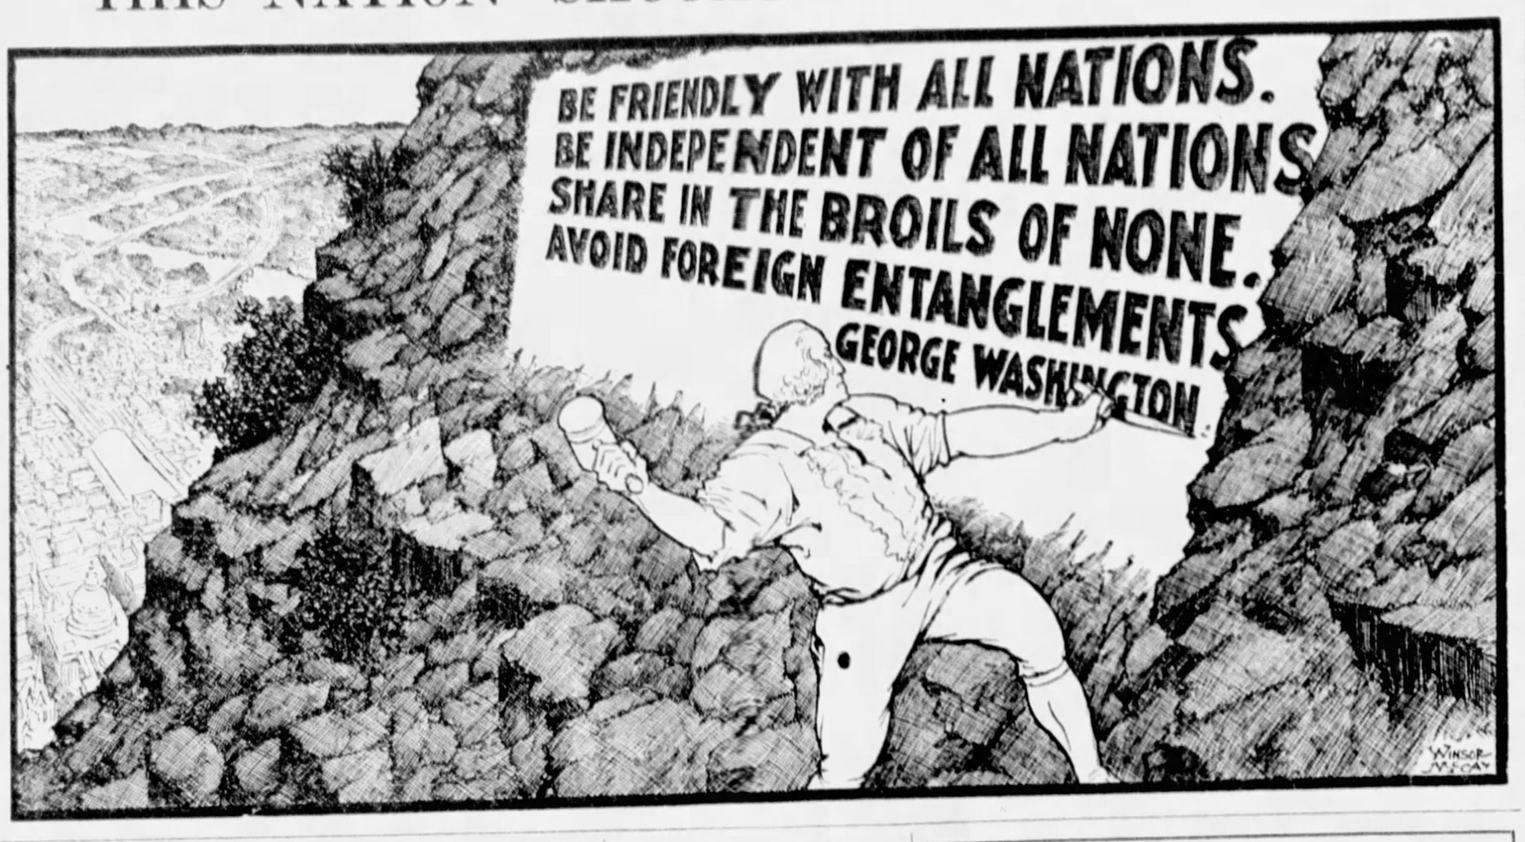
THIS NATION SHOULD OBEY HIS ADVICE



True in 1796, True Now

Washington's Farewell Fits Present in its Warning Against Political Ties to European Nations.

In annual acknowledgment of its gratitude for his country's heritage from George Washington, the United States Senate will pause in its deliberations today, that it may lend attentive ear while one of its members reads the farewell address.

Vice President Curtis, a Republican, has designated for this distinguished duty Senator Bratton, of New Mexico, a Democrat.

At the hands of the present presiding officer of the Senate this designation is no empty compliment. Mr. Curtis has publicly affirmed his belief that this valedictory is an indispensable a guide today, in the governance of our national affairs and the conduct of our foreign relations, as it was the day it was issued on September 17, 1796.

The best evidence that the principles enunciated in the address were intended for permanent and not temporary application is to be found in the words of its author.

In offering to his countrymen "these counsels of an old and affectionate friend," Washington expressed the hope that "they may now and then recur to moderate the fury of party strife, to warn against the mischiefs of foreign intrigue, to guard against the impostures of pretended patriotism."

History repeats itself in the present effort of Europe to tempt the United States to abandon "the great rule of conduct in regard to foreign governments" which the address lays down—that "in extending our commercial relations with them, to have with them as little political connection as possible."

More than a century ago when Europe was forming the Holy Alliance the hope was entertained that the United States would accept membership in that league of nations.

And in giving the reasons why this country refused membership in that league, John Quincy Adams, who was secretary of state, prophesied that Europe would renew its attempt at a later period. In a letter written on July 5, 1820, Secretary Adams said:

"The political system of the United States is extra-European. To stand in firm and cautious independence of all entanglements in the European system has been a cardinal point of their policy under every administration of their government, from the peace of 1783 to this day.

"If at the original adoption of their system there should have been any doubt of its justice or its wisdom, there can be none at this time. Every year's experience rivets it more deeply in the principles and opinions of the nation.

"Yet in proportion as the importance of the United States as one of the members of the general society of nations increases in the eyes of the others, the difficulties of maintaining this system and the temptations to depart from it increase and multiply with it."

Mr. Adams pointed out that the United States could contribute more effectually to the "sublime objects" avowed by the Holy Alliance by remaining out of it than by "acceding formally to that compact."

These prophetic words of John Quincy Adams apply with equal force to that other and later "evil thing with a holy name"—the League of Nations and its Court.

From Washington to Roosevelt every president and every Congress has resisted the temptations to "embroil our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor and caprice."

And the American people look to their Senators in Congress today to keep the faith of the farewell address by heeding its admonition that "'tis our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliances with any portion of the foreign world."

A Senate that does not annually rededicate itself to that high mission only mocks the memory of George Washington by pausing in its deliberations to listen to the reading of the farewell address.

Barbarous and Degrading

Execution of Dague and Mrs. Shrader Was a Disgrace to Pennsylvania.

The execution of Mrs. Irene Shrader and Glenn Dague this morning is a reminder that in some respects we are not far removed from the Dark Ages.

They were guilty, of course; they had a fair trial. It was immaterial which of them fired the shot that killed Patrolman Paul, since under the law the accomplice shares responsibility equally with the actual slayer. But putting them to death was not the way in which a thoroughly enlightened state would have handled the case.

That they were executed quickly and (presumably) painlessly has nothing to do with it. Judicial murder is barbarous and degrading whatever the method employed.

Hundreds of morons begged to be allowed to witness the execution. But tens of thousands of Pennsylvanians were shocked by the very thought of it. Even to read about the hideous business was painful to them.

The defenders of capital punishment assert it deters others from committing crimes. There is abundant evidence to the contrary.

There is scant likelihood that the execution today will lessen Pennsylvania's murder rate.

It is to be hoped it will arouse sentiment in favor of abolishing capital punishment.

A Devilish Joke

Nice little idea they tried to put over at the dope conference in Geneva a few weeks ago.

They were willing to limit the importation of morphine, cocaine, heroin and opium—oh yes, perfectly willing.

Provided that the "ester" could slip into the country without let or hindrance of any sort.

What is an ester?

An ester, if you please, is simply morphine, or opium or cocaine, with some other drug, like quinine or carbonate of soda, or something harmless like that added to the ester so that it can sell under another name.

And it's just as much of a narcotic taken that way as it is when it is taken in an opium pipe, or an opium den or jabbed into the veins with a hypodermic needle.

Is the United States going to permit that little joke to become an international law?

That depends upon whether you and your neighbors read the dope news this week and learn what these little plans are all about.

WOMEN SCIENTISTS

By Archibald Henderson

Mathematics somehow seems alien and antipathetic to the spirit and genius of woman. With women the world is accustomed to associate qualities embraced under the indicative word femininity. Beauty, romance, sentiment, humanism, nobility, virtue, endurance, intuition, motherhood. These are some of the principal qualities we are accustomed to attribute to womanhood. Mathematics is the most exacting mistress; it requires the utmost self-abnegation and complete preoccupation with the presumably dry subjects with which it deals. Women are not attracted to a subject which must be pursued as an end in itself, if genuine success in it is to be attained.

There is little doubt that Hypatia, daughter of Theon of Alexandria, was a mathematician of considerable eminence. The romance of her life and the tragedy of her death have been memorably told by Charles Kingsley in his novel, Hypatia. In 1753, John Toland published in London an interesting and curious pamphlet entitled: Hypatia or the History of a most beautiful, most virtuous, most learned, and every way accomplished Lady; who was torn to pieces by the clergy of Alexandria.

In modern times, a truly eminent mathematician was Sonya Kovalevsky, pupil of Weierstrass and friend of Mittag-Lefler. Concerning her death, which occurred in 1891, it has been said: Few deaths have awakened such great and such general regret. From nearly all quarters of the civilized world telegrams of condolence reached the Stockholm University. From the highly conservative University of St. Petersburg, of which she had been made a corresponding member during the last year of her life, down to the Sunday school in Tiflis and the kindergarten in Kharkoff, all joined in showing honor to her memory. The women of Russia decided to raise a monument on her grave in Stockholm. At her burial, carriage-loads of flowers covered the dark, newly-turned earth among the snowdrifts in the Stockholm cemetery. All the papers and reviews contained honorable mention of the unique woman who had brought honor on her sex.

Three other women, prior to the present century, are noted for their work in mathematics. Maria Gaetana Agnesi, born 1718, died 1799, succeeded her father as professor of mathmetics at the University of Bologna, receiving her appointment at the hands of Pope Benedict XIV. Her treatise on analytic geometry is well known. To a curious curve which she discovered has been given the name: the Witch of Agnesi.

Caroline Herschel, born at Hanover, Germany, in 1750, is remembered in the history of science for her indefatigable labors in assisting her brother, William, the famous astronomer. Her calculations fill volumes, and she was amazingly accurate as a computer.

Maria Mitchell, born on the Island of Nantucket, Mass., August 1, 1818, has brought fame to American women for her achievements. At 17 she studied Bridge's Conic Sections, Hutton's Mathematics and Bowditch's Navigator. For a period of more than 20 years, beginning in 1865, she served as professor of mathematics at Vassar College. She was a member of various learned societies, and held honorary degrees from Hanover and Columbia. She died at Lynn, Mass., June 28, 1889.

Marry-Go-Round

By HELEN ROWLAND.

Golf Widowlogues.

"How can you look so cheerful?" demanded Mrs. Divot. "Don't you KNOW that there's a drought and a 'depression,' and—and everything?"

* * *

"Of course!" rejoined Mrs. Green, motioning her to a seat on the divan. "But there are lots of silver spots on the lining of the business cloud. We've had to sell our car, darling."

* * *

"I don't see anything glamorous about that!" said Mrs. Divot.

* * *

"Well—not exactly," agreed Mrs. Green. "But now the children have to WALK to school, which is good for their health and, incidentally, for their morale. They won't grow up in the fond delusion that they are going to be carried through life on padded cushions. That idea has been the chief cause of the wreckage of the younger generation."

* * *

"Yes," sighed Mrs. Divot. "Most of them seem to think that they are going to make a living or a fortune by pushing a button at the side of a desk."

* * *

"And what an awakening they have coming to them!" said Mrs. Green. "Already my Betty is learning to sew. Making her own hats and blouses and letting down her frocks, you know. It's the only way the girl can have enough clothes to 'carry on' with. Necessity is the mother of a lot of things besides invention. It's wonderful!"

* * *

"And little Jack is suddenly taking a violent interest in his father's business, and what he calls his 'career.' He has actually waked up to the stern fact that he will have to earn a living, instead of just picking it off the family tree. I was afraid that he was never going to develop an ambition. And why should he, with everything handed to him on a silver platter?

* * *

"Best of all, we see a great deal more of our offspring, now that they can't go careening around the city, all day and night, in a high-powered car; and we are actually getting acquainted with them. They are really nice kids.

* * *

"Then there's the Bridge Club. We've stopped serving caviar sandwiches and champagne cocktails and are donating the money to the unemployed. And the prizes are checks, which we turn over to the public charities, instead of the useless and atrocious bits of bric-a-brac. It's lots more kick, somehow, giving something that somebody needs, instead of getting something you don't want or need. And all of us are reducing quite miraculously. I never realized how fattening bridge luncheons could be!

* * *

"Finally, there's John. He comes right home from the office these days — all fagged and distrait, of course, but human. He's got something on his mind besides golf. Why, I'm scarcely a golf-widow, any longer!

* * *

"I shouldn't wonder if the depression would bring back family life and revive 'the home', once more. You sort of cling together when you're 'going down'! Destitution is tragic—but sometimes poverty is a blessing in disguise!"

LISTEN, WORLD!

By Elsie Robinson

Hate doesn't pay.

Those three words do not startle you. They hardly arouse your interest. You have said them all your life. You have heard other people say them. You have said them so often that they have lost their meaning—they are only three, pretty, polite words that all nice people say.

But actually you have never believed those words. You have always believed that hate does pay. You have always believed that hate was necessary and inevitable . . and you have always practiced hate.

The whole world believes in and practices hate. And it is natural that it should. For the human race, after all, is an animal race. Animals with souls, but still alien to the uses of their souls. Still bound by the old law of talon and fang—still using hate as they once used claw and club. Then wondering dumbly why hate won't work . . . why it always makes matters worse—

Hate never works for animals with souls. Your own hate is the worst accident that can happen to your life—

Hate will do you more harm than your bitterest enemy could possibly do you.

Your enemy may hurt your reputation, steal your money or waste your time—

But he can't waste your mind and wreck your spirit unless you let him.

Your mind and your spirit are in your own keeping and beyond the reach of any other mortal. No one on earth but you, yourself, can bankrupt your soul, ravel your mind, actually poison your blood and flesh by hate. If you don't believe it, check yourself up the next time you're going through a hate orgy, and note the returns.

Time sets a limit on your enemy's activities. He may spend an hour a day trying to do you wrong. And his feud may last for a month or a year. But sooner or later he will turn to his personal affairs and forget yours. But you, if you permit yourself to hate, are in the grip of that feud all the time.

You are actually working for your enemy.

You are carrying on the evil effects of his malice while he, himself, plays or sleeps or works or forgets about you entirely.

That's why hate doesn't pay. It never conquers malice—it simply perpetuates malice. It does not destroy your enemy. It destroys you—it is your enemy's best ally!

Every prize fighter knows that fact and tries, by every trick, to make his opponent angry. That anger will do more to destroy his opponent's morale than a score of uppercuts. It will make him punch drunk before the first round is finished.

Does that mean that we should never resent injustice nor resist viciousness? It certainly does not. There are people who are as dangerous as wolves, as unreliable as worms. It is useless to sentimentalize over such people. You must protect yourself against them. You are a traitor to your most sacred duty if you don't.

But hate will not protect you. Hate will only destroy your defenses.

Protect yourself with your brain. Understand your enemy. Outsmart him. Outsmart him by kindness, if possible. But never let him drag you down into the hell of his own malice. . . . As he surely will drag you if you hate him.

ONCE OVERS

By J. J. Mundy

You wonder whether you are dumb or numb—so few things interest you.

Formerly you enjoyed sports that now have positively no appeal to you.

Perhaps you are growing up and you are being your age.

At the same time you have not found out what a person of your age should enjoy, isn't that it?

If you had advanced with your age you would have been making adjustments and readjustments all along the line.

You would have established a routine of life elastic enough to be able to enjoy something all the time.

But because of your age you may have decided that the simple things are foolish and you are crying after those which are beyond your purse or strength.

ISN'T IT SO?

The shortest horse gets the longest odds.

The man who is always making an exhibition of himself finds it no trouble to show goods.

Another unpleasant thing about the road to happiness is that it has so many detours.

In an argument a woman can do more with one tear than a man can with a barrel of logic.

Just about the time you think you are going to meet ends, someone comes along and moves the ends farther apart.

Even two friendly undertakers may be deadly rivals.

All men may be born equal, but some of us get to be more thin-skinned than others.

The man who is afraid to fight must do some tall bluffing to keep the other fellow from finding it out.

The world admires a man who has sand and sense almost as much as one who has dust and dollars.

When it comes to eating their own words, some people may feel as if they'd bitten off more than they can chew.

OH, THESE WOMEN

By Leola Allard

He was an old man, shabby and tired, and because he couldn't get anything else to do, he delivered things for the corner drug store. A nice old German owns the store and he is a kindly soul, who instead of hiring boys after school, who have homes, gave the work to the old fellow.

The back door bell rang and the lady answered it, took the package and slammed the door. He wasn't very good to look at. People aren't when they are half starved and their clothes have been slept in, but there was something in his eyes that would have prompted me to TIP HIM. The lady didn't.

I had luncheon with her next day and for a bill of $2.50 she gave the haughty waiter a 50-cent tip. He looked pretty well heeled and probably owned real estate and a car. At any rate he wasn't very badly in need of the 50 cents.

Why is it that people—men as well as women, give their big tips to the people who need it the least? If they can afford to give liberally to both why don't they, and if they can't, why don't they give it where it is most needed?

Take the little girls who work for small wages in small restaurants and tea rooms. A dime is what they usually get. But women hesitate to give a quarter to one of those girls, because they don't HAVE TO do it. Other women don't.

I remember once going into the basement of a big store and a pathetic little thing, too young and too frail to work, served me so courtesly, and her clothes looked so clean and darned and so bravely smart in spite of it, that I gave her 50 cents. I don't know why I did it, but she blushed and said "Oh, thank you." There was a very evident buoyancy that followed that 50 cents. It was worth a couple of dollars to see it.

Of course not all stores permit tips, but some have no rules. Certainly the hurry-up restaurants where the girls dash around at noon like water bugs, let waitresses take tips, and the hurried business men and the women who save their generosity for the brighter cafes, might do well to remember that these girls could do more with a quarter than any man in any restaurant anywhere.

Let a shiney youngster with a jaunty look to him bring you a telegram, and you will give him a dim or a quarter. But let one of these broken down old men who don't like to be seen doing such work, hobble up and hand you a dispatch, and you sign and shut the door. Why?

A cute little Italian boy delivers groceries at my apartment. He came several times one afternoon when I was especially forgetful and brought little things that should have been ordered with the first load. He did it smilingly and closed the door so softly that I called him back and gave him a quarter. I would have given a he-waiter that without a thrill of any kind, but I want to tell you I got more return for that quarter in the smile of that kid than I ever extracted from any waiter, or sniffy door man, or red cap or any other kind of servant, and I suppose the element of surprise had something to do with it. Maybe it was the big patches on his pants that gave me the idea, but boy, it was a grand one! Try it some time. Give the tips to the ones who need it most and get a real kick out of tipping.

WORDS OF THE WISE

True joy is a serene and sober motion; and they are miserably out that take laughing for rejoicing: the seat of it is within, and there is no cheerfulness like the resolutions of a brave mind.—Seneca.

Text for Today Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God: for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man: But every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed. James, ii:13, 14.

NEW YORK DAY BY DAY

By O. O. McINTYRE

NEW YORK, Feb. 23.—Diary of a modern Pepys: Early out to buy some grit hominy which, properly prepared, is the finest breakfast dish I know. And a pleasant note from Charles M. Schwab that he had not forgotten me as I recently chronicled and named the circumstances of our meeting years ago.

Came news, too, that young Clayton Seitz is to marry a San Francisco maid and live in Manila. So dawdling over my papers, and with my wife to buy a stand for the Rookwood vase from Frank Rostock. Then to the Chatham to Kathleen and Charles Norris' tea.

In the evening Mrs. Sharpe and Miss Hogg to dinner. They to "Mrs. Moonlight" and we to "Private Lives," paying $18 for two seats to see a $3.85 show, nor did I have the feeling of being gyped. So home to reading my autographed copy of "Stage Struck John Golden" until 4 a. m.

The Rhyming Optimist

By ALINE MICHAELIS.

Landscape

This land grows fiercer, farther South and West,
The trees more stunted and the hills more steep,
Far off, against the sky a lonely height
Sets up its barrier across the sun
And at its foot flings down the robe of night,
Dim shadow-vestments, long ere day is done.

Some puzzling member of an alien race;
Alike expose this enigmatic face.
Inscrutable and fierce, it still imparts
